PREFACE.

For the purpose of collecting British Post Marks—a pursuit which has been increasing in popularity of late—it is necessary to be furnished with a list of the Official obliterating numbers; and as many additions have been made since Mr. Daniels' "History of British Postmarks" appeared in 1898, I have ventured to bring out this revised edition of the numbers which have at different times been allotted to the various Offices.

In order to render the list more complete, I have endeavoured to locate each place, by adding the County, a matter in many cases of some difficulty, especially where there are several places of the same name, since it was not considered necessary to identify them in the early Official Lists, and they consequently can in some cases only be located with certainty by means of the postmarks themselves.

For purposes of easy reference the Index has been divided into five heads, corresponding to the five lists; and Telegraph Code Letters have been appended to such places as possess them.

Many small errors, chiefly of spelling, which appear in Mr. Daniels' Book have been corrected, and every care has been taken to avoid mistakes; but in such a complicated work as this has proved to be some are sure to have crept in, and I shall feel obliged to anyone who will acquaint me of any they may find.

In conclusion, I have to thank most heartily Mr. Daniels for allowing me to use his book as the basis of this one; also Mr. J. G. Hendy and Mr. C. F. Dendy Marshall for valuable information and assistance given me throughout its preparation, without which I greatly doubt if the work would have been completed.

THOMAS WHITWORTH.
