INTRODUCTION.

THE collecting of Postage Stamps is a fashion not confined to this country, or to a single class; for collections are frequently to be seen in the drawing-room of the luxurious, in the study of the enlightened, and the locker of the schoolboy.

The fashion has been ridiculed, as all fashions will be; but if postage stamps are properly studied, collected, and arranged, there is no reason why they may not be quite as instructive and entertaining as the collection of birds, butterflies, shells, books, engravings, coins, or other objects.

The use and charm of collecting any kind of object is to educate the mind and the eye to careful observation, accurate comparison, and just reasoning on the differences and likenesses which they present, and to interest the collector in the design or art shown in their creation or manufacture, and the history of the country which produces or uses the objects collected. The postage stamps afford good objects for all these branches of study, as they are sufficiently different to present broad outlines for their classification; and yet some of the variations are so slight that they require minute examination and comparison to prevent them from being overlooked; and the fact of obtaining stamps from so many countries suggests to ask what were the circumstances that induced their adoption, the history of the countries which issue them, and the understanding why some countries have considered it necessary, in so few years as have passed since they first came into use, to make so many changes in the form or design of the stamp used, while other countries, like Holland, have never made the slightest change.

The changes referred to all mark some historical event of importance; such as the accession of a new king, a change in the form of government, or the absorption of a smaller state into some larger one, a change in the currency, or some other revolution. Hence a collection of postage stamps may be considered, like a collection of coins, an epitome of the history of Europe and America for the last quarter of a century; and at the same time, as they exhibit much variation in design and in execution, as a collection of works of art on a small scale, showing the style of art of the countries that issue them; while the size of the collection, and the manner in which they are arranged and kept, will show the industry, judgment, neatness, and taste of the collector, who should always bear in mind that every accessory that is showy and bright takes away from the appearance and interest of the stamps themselves.

The full use of the stamps in teaching geography and history can only be obtained when they are arranged in systematic and chronological order. This has unfortunately not been seen by many compilers of catalogues and collectors, who place their stamps of the different countries alphabetically, thus separating the stamps of neighbouring countries of the same royal house, of the same language, or kind of money, into different parts of their collection. Many of these compilers and collectors have not been consistent with themselves, and arranged their collections partly geographically and partly alphabetically: this is even less instructive and more difficult to consult, as it is not easy to recollect how the stamps follow each other.

I began to collect postage stamps shortly after the system was established and before it had become a rage, as I took a great interest in their use and extension; as I believe I was the first who proposed, in 1834, the system of a small uniform rate of postage to be pre-paid by stamps, having satisfied my own mind that the great cost of the Post Office was not the reception, carriage, and delivery of the letters, but the complicated system of accounts that the old system required; and having learned from the best writers on political economy that the collection of money by stamps was the most certain and economical. It was, in fact, the mere application of the system used with regard to newspapers to letters in general.

I found, after considerable trouble, that there was little, or, indeed, I may say no chance of getting attention to the plans suggested, without I could devote the whole of my time and energy to the agitation and development of it, which was not consistent with my position in the British Museum,—an institution to which I had from a youth devoted my energies.

Fortunately Mr. (now Sir) Rowland Hill, who had leisure at his command by the dissolution of the South Australian Company, in 1837, published several pamphlets on a similar plan, and with the assistance of Mr. G. Moffatt, Mr. Henry Cole, Mr. Dillon, and sundry merchants and members of Parliament, whom they succeeded in interesting in the question, they carried the measure after very great exertion; and it has been a very great success, not only in a financial point of view, but also in what I considered a more important one, in spreading education and domestic intercourse among the people at large, and thereby increasing the happiness and well-being of the community.

Large as is the balance carried to the Revenue from the Post Office, the system proposed by me, and that propounded by Mr. Rowland Hill in his pamphlet, and which he and the other advocates of the change recommended before the Parliamentary and other Committees, have never been completely carried out; consequently a large staff of clerks and other officials is still retained at the Post Office, at a large expense, to keep the complicated accounts that a few unpaid letters require, which, if the system were fully carried out, would not be necessary.

I am aware that the prepayment of all letters by stamp is very difficult, if not impossible, to be carried out; but this is not necessary. There is no necessity for any account of unpaid letters to be kept, except in cases where the official suspects some unfair play; otherwise it might be left for the postmaster, through whose hands the unstamped letter last passes, to place the requisite stamps upon it, and to collect the cost of those stamps from the person to whom the letter is directed. This he is likely to do with care, as each postmaster is allowed a commission on all the stamps he sells; and to prevent, as much as possible, the sending of letters that would require this treatment, the system of paying double postage, or even a higher fine, should be enforced on all letters not paid for in stamps before they are despatched. It is said that the postmaster may lose, as many of the letters on which he has placed stamps may be refused. If so, they would be returned to the Dead-letter Office, and his stamps allowed for; but this will not be often requisite, as the Post Office can now enforce the payment against the sender if it be refused by the person to whom the letter is directed.

The postage prepaid by stamps has been adopted, as this list will prove, by many other countries, and has been extended into other branches of the Government and the law courts. It is also used in the electric telegraph companies, and in several errand and carrier companies in Europe and America.

Oddly enough, some collectors place the stamps used by the Hamburg and American private carrier companies with their postage stamps. This catalogue is confined to stamps issued by government post-offices; for if those used by private establishments were to be included, it would be difficult to define the limit.*

While the subject was under discussion, an envelope was proposed surrounded by an engine-turned border, with the value and the weight it would carry marked in the corner; and during the discussion in Parliament various stamped covers were circulated by the advocates of the plan, to show the kind of envelope and stamp which they proposed should be used. They are now rare, and only to be seen in the albums of the wives and children of the members of the committee who preserved them.

In 1840, when the new system was established, two printed envelopes were issued bearing a design by Mulready, the Royal Academician, "with the hopes of spreading the taste for high art;"

* See A. Trollope's "North America," vol. ii., p. 367.

but they called forth such an outburst of ridicule, and such a number of caricatures, that they were soon disused; and then the engraved profile of the Queen was adopted as an adhesive stamp for affixing on letters, and after some time an embossed profile of the Queen was issued, stamped on paper as an envelope.

When the first adhesive stamps were issued they were printed in black ink; but it was found difficult to properly obliterate them either with black or red ink, and they were afterwards issued printed in different coloured ink, so that they can all be obliterated with the same black hand or machine stamp.

Some of the colonies commenced with manufacturing their own stamps, and used emblematic designs, as "Hope reclining," for the Cape of Good Hope; a "Swan," for Swan River; the "Queen on her Throne," for Victoria; but by degrees they have generally adopted a simple profile of the Queen, like the English; and the stamps now used in the colonies, and indeed in many parts of the world, are not only designed and engraved, but also printed or embossed, in England. Many of these are executed by Messrs. De la Rue & Co., of Bunhill Row, who call themselves, in the Directory, "Envelope Makers and Manufacturers of Government and Colonial Adhesive Stamps;" and Perkins, Bacon, & Co., in Fleet Street, "Bond and Bank Note Engravers." They are printed in these establishments under the supervision of an officer of the Inland Revenue department, or an inspector appointed by the Colonial governments.

The majority of foreign governments, as they have adopted the system, have also adopted the profile or portrait of their sovereign for the stamp. Other governments use the arms of the state or sovereign for the purpose.

Some states, which began by merely using a number surrounded by a more or less complicated frame as a stamp, have gradually adopted the royal portrait.

In England, the manner in which the stamps have been obliterated has undergone many changes; now they are obliterated by a block, which, by the form of the internal disk, and the number in it, marks the postal district in which it was originally stamped. Each Continental state obliterates in its own manner; several have undergone considerable change during the time the stamps have been in use. In France they not only obliterate with a hand-stamp, but the stamp used has acute prominences on it, so as to perforate the stamp when they obliterate it. The study of the means employed for this simple purpose affords an interesting object of contemplation.

In some of the outlying offices in India, Ceylon, &c., the stamp is obliterated by the sender with a pen and ink before the letter is despatched.

In most countries the adhesive stamp and the envelope stamp are different,—the one being printed from a surface, and the other embossed; this is even the case in Prussia, where the design of the two stamps are the same; but, lately, Austria has issued the same embossed design both as a denticulated adhesive stamp and as an envelope. In a few localities the envelopes are only stamped with a simple hand-stamp.

In England the Stamp Office will place an embossed stamp on any paper that is sent to them for that purpose. So that the embossed stamps are circulated in very different forms and kinds of paper. They also permit embossed rings with the name of a firm, as Smith, Elder, & Co., and others, to be printed at the same time and in the same manner as the stamp; and stamps so circulated have been regarded as distinct kinds of stamps, when in fact they are only means of advertisement used by certain private firms.

The first English adhesive stamps were printed with black ink, and obliterated first with black and then with red ink. This was found inconvenient, and since then they have been printed with red and blue inks, and obliterated with black.

Some few stamps, as the old 4 anna stamp of India, the "too late" and "registered" stamps of South Australia, the stamps of some of the Swiss Cantons, and some of the more modern embossed stamps of the United States, are printed in inks of two colours.

The Russian and Polish adhesive stamps are printed in three colours. They are the most beautiful stamps that have yet been issued.

Some of the German States issued their first stamps printed in black ink on different coloured papers; but they have, one after another, given up the practice, and now issue the stamps printed with different coloured inks on white paper. Some of them, as Hanover, print the stamps with black ink, or, rarely, coloured ink, on white paper, and then cover the whole stamp with a coloured network.

The different German States seem to have changed the colour of the paper or the ink with which they printed the stamps at different times very capriciously, hence the same stamp occurs of very different colours. They are said to have adopted a uniform colour for stamps of the same value, thus:—

4 pfennige, or $\frac{1}{2}$ silbr. gr., or 1 kr.	Green.
6 pfennige, or $\frac{1}{2}$ silbr. gr.	Orange.
1 silbr. gr., or 3 kr.	Red.
2 silbr. gr., or 6 kr.	Blue.
3 silbr. gr., or 9 kr.	Brown.

The dies, before they are used, are often proved, by regulation of the Stamp Office, with a different coloured ink from that under which they are legally issued; some of these proofs have got into collections: they are called essai in the French catalogue; translated by some—essays!

The Australian Colonies sometimes send out the same stamps of different shades of colour.

For these reasons, I have not considered any change in the colour of the stamp as a different stamp; for it is certainly the same, whether it is on green or white paper, or printed in black, red, or green ink.

Formerly, some of these stamps were printed from copper-plates; but now, almost all the stamps are printed from wooden or metal blocks; the metal blocks being all struck from a single die, and then placed in a frame containing a certain number of stamps; the blocks are inked with rollers like letter-press printing, which is far more economical, both in labour and time. The die of the embossed stamps is inked on the surface; hence it is the sunken part that is coloured, while the raised part is the original colour of the paper. This fact has not been sufficiently observed, for some stamps, which differed in this respect, have been regarded as belonging to the same type.

In England, the adhesive stamps are printed on paper with a peculiar water-mark, different in the various stamps; and the envelopes issued by the English Stamp Office are all printed on a peculiar paper. Formerly there were three lines of coloured silk inserted in the paper, so as to form a line across the stamp; and several foreign governments adopted the same plan. It has now been disused in England and Germany; but in the latter they print in small letters, the value of the envelope, in three lines, over the stamp, thus: Post couvert, Drei groschen; Ein groschen, Post couvert.

In Russia, the envelopes are embossed on paper prepared for the purpose, with the Russian spread-eagle for a water-mark, with different patterns according to the value.

In England, the regulation is that the stamp should be placed on the upper right-hand corner of the letter or envelope.

In Saxony, Hanover, Baden, Brunswick, and Austria the stamp was formerly placed on the left-hand side of the envelope; now, they are usually placed, as in England, on the upper right-hand corner. In some lists and collections these are considered different stamps.

In Russia, the stamps of the envelopes are placed on the flap of the envelope; and in the Brazils, the stamps are used as a seal; this causes them sometimes to be overlooked by the English Post Office.

Most of the English colonies have the name of country that issues them marked on the stamp. Several foreign countries have adopted the same plan, but, as they are often in a foreign tongue, it is necessary to translate the names into the English one used in this catalogue, thus:—

Bayern , Bavaria.	Preussen , Prussia.
Braunschweig , Brunswick.	Parmensi , Parma.
IONI KON K PATOΣ, Ionian Islands.	Sachsen , Saxony.
ΕΑΑ, Greece.	S. P. B. , St. Petersburg.
Estensi , Modena.	Sicilia , Sicily.
Mejico , Mexico.	Sverige , Sweden.
Modenensi , Modena.	Toscana , Tuscany.
Neapolitana , Naples.	U. S. , United States.
Nov. Camb. Aust. , New South Wales.	Warszawska , Warsaw.
Norge , Norway.

The name of the coin marked on stamps is interesting, and may lead, in cases where the name is not marked on them, to the discovery of their origin.

This list is confined to the postage stamps which are issued by the different governments.

I have therefore excluded the stamps issued by different private persons or companies who carry letters or parcels, or electric telegraph messages, and which have found it convenient to issue stamps. They are no more postage stamps than the stamps issued by the Inland Revenue Office for fiscal purposes.

There will not be found in it the stamps issued by Hamer's Hamburg Boten, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, or the different City expresses; or errand and carrier offices of the United States, which have often been regarded as postage stamps, and entered as such in the lists published by different persons. They would doubtless form an interesting collection by themselves, showing how convenient the collecting of revenue by stamps has been found.

The desire which some persons have to show stamps that are not in other collections has induced the dealers to produce pretended stamps, which have no real existence; as, for example, a French stamp with the portrait of the Republic, inscribed, Essai, 1858, which is after the "Empire" was established; or Turkish stamps, inscribed 6 Truze and 3 Mara, the Turkish Government not having as yet issued any stamps. Some collectors show Chinese stamps, which are only the impression of the seal of the mandarin who sent the letter. In the same manner, and for the same purpose, the colours of some stamps are artificially changed by soaking in water or some chemical fluid, or the stamps are covered over with a wash of colour, or the paper on which they are printed is stained. Some of the stamps that were issued by the Provisional Government that followed the outbreak in Europe of 1848 have been withdrawn from circulation, and become rare, and therefore sell at a large price; this has induced some French dealers in them to have them imitated or forged. They are known from the real stamps, as they are lithograph, while the originals were block-printed.

The postage stamps are extensively used in this country as a species of paper money. To facilitate this use, the post-offices throughout this country have lately been directed to receive postage stamps, at a small discount, from any one that may present them in a clean state and more than two united together.

During the terrible Civil conflict in the late "United States" they form almost the only currency of small value in circulation; and the Government issued them without being gummed for the purpose of their being so used, as it was found that the gummed stamps were apt to adhere together when carried and handled. They have lately issued postage stamps printed on larger paper, with long directions, under the title of Postage Currency, for 5 and 10 cents. "Act approved, July 17, 1862."

After the English name of the country or place where the stamp is issued, follows the foreign name of the place, or title of the king, or other inscription that may be on the stamps of that locality. In the description of the individual stamps, the lettering which is on the stamps is printed in italic. The list is arranged geographically, commencing with those of Great Britain and her colonies, and each country in succession, with its colonies or dependencies.

A Manual of Structural Botany.

By M. C. COOKE, Author of "Seven Sisters of Sleep," &c.

"Condensed, yet clear, comprehensive, but brief, it affords to the learner a distinct view."—Globe.

"This excellent little volume was more particularly intended for the use of students in the Botanical Classes established for operatives, into whose hands it was most desirable to place some written record of the lessons they were attending; but its usefulness is by no means limited to such readers, as it forms one of the very best as well as simplest and most comprehensive introductions to Botany we have ever met with. Every difficult scientific word—those great stumbling-blocks to beginners—is not only explained, but well illustrated by a woodcut introduced in the text, so that any misunderstanding of what is meant is rendered impossible, and the learner takes in the lesson doubly enforced: taught, that is, to both mind and eye at once. . . . We are confidently able to recommend the little volume to public favour, its very low price (1s.) bringing it within the range of all purchasers."—Era.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth, price 2s. 6d.

A Manual of Botanic Terms.

By M. C. COOKE. With more than 300 Illustrations.

"We do not hesitate to say that by a careful use of this book a sound knowledge of the theoretical portion of Botany may be obtained without tedious labour."—Mining Journal.

"This elegant little volume will be a welcome boon to all botanical students. It contains intelligible descriptions of all the terms used in botanical science, with a collection of beautifully-executed illustrations at the end of the volume. To all who do not, but are willing to know the full meaning of such terms as Campylopermous, Sterigmate, and Perichæcium, this volume may be safely recommended."—Critic.

"This book affords special facilities for the acquisition of the technicalities of botanical science to such as are not already masters of the dead languages. It is illustrated by numerous explanatory diagrams."—The Dial.

The British Fungi

(A plain and Easy Account of). With especial reference to the Esculent and other Economic Species. By M. C. COOKE. With Coloured Plates of 40 Species.

"The author is a thorough mycophagist, well acquainted with the peculiar features by which the most remarkable of the edible kinds of Fungi may be known."—Gardener's Chronicle.

"A very readable volume upon the lowest and least generally understood race of plants. For popular purposes the book could not have been better done."—Athenaeum.

"This is a very commendable little book. In the work before us we find associated accurate scientific knowledge, full and satisfactory illustration by coloured lithography and woodcuts, and ample and interesting information."—Lancet.

"The book is a very useful one, supplying, for a few shillings, information not hitherto attainable except at a much larger cost."—Field.

"The author of this, at present, the only work written to popularise the study of Fungi, has produced a remarkably neat and well illustrated hand-book to this tribe of plants."—Parthenon.

Fully illustrated, price 4s. coloured by hand; 2s. 6d. plain.

The British Ferns

(A plain and Easy Account of). Together with their Classification, Arrangement of Genera, Structure, and Functions, Directions for Out-door and In-door Cultivation, &c. By MRS. LANKESTER.

"Not only plain and easy, but elegantly illustrated."—Athenaeum.

"Mrs. Lankester has given us a handy pocket volume, with a great deal of information about the uses, supposed and real, of the Ferns, and hints for their cultivation."—Guardian.

"A charming little guide to one of the pleasantest of quiet country amusements. It is small, cheap, elegant in form, and illustrated with coloured plates. Its description blends popular with scientific information; there are instructions for drying and collecting, and a glossary of scientific terms. The work is one that may be used by a lady without any previous training as a botanist. It is elegant enough to lie on a drawing-room table, small and light enough to be carried about without trouble in bag or pocket, and referred to by the hearth side."—Examiner.

"Mrs. Lankester thoroughly understands how to make her science bend gracefully to common comprehension."—Era.

Price 2s. 6d.; the same in Case without Description, price 2s.

Twelve British Ferns ;

Wild Flowers worth Notice.

A selection from the British Flora of some of our native plants which are most attractive for their Beauty, Uses, or Associations. By MRS. LANKESTER. Illustrated by J. E. SOWERBY.

"Not a botanical treatise, but a practical minister to a growing taste, the parent of new pleasures and improved habits ; an intelligent companion of healthful strolls through sylvan glades."—Morning Post.

"We can assure our readers that Mrs. Lankester's accounts of her favourite plants are well worth their best attention, and her little bits of folk lore and general information are introduced with what we should consider great artistic skill, but that she writes so easily and naturally, that no deliberate effort seems to have been made. We should say especially that any one who wishes to thoroughly enjoy the flowers of their neighbourhood will do well to purchase 'Wild Flowers worth Notice.' It is a little book that teaches a great deal, and in so pleasant a way, that to be wearied is impossible."—Era.

"We heartily recommend this exceedingly pretty little volume to the large class who delight in flowers, whether in the field or in the garden, but who, deterred by its innumerable 'words of learned length and thundering sound,' decline to enter on the study of botany as a science. They will find nearly one hundred wild flowers, such as they meet with in any walk, so accurately represented in colours by Mr. Sowerby, that the recognition will be a pleasure instead of a difficulty, and so agreeably described by the authoress, that a new pleasure is imparted to even such well-known plants as buttercups and daisies."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"We are so frequently asked by our country friends to recommend books on Flowers and Ferns that shall be interesting without being too scientific, that we are heartily glad to have the opportunity of so doing which the present elegant but cheap little volume affords."—Practical Farmers' Chronicle.

"It must not be supposed that Mrs. Lankester only deals with botanical facts ; she has much legendary lore to relate, and many curious anecdotes to tell ; so that, whether regarded as a handbook for a country walk, or as a volume for perusal in the library, 'Wild Flowers worth Notice' is equally acceptable."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

"We could while away a long summer day talking of the pleasant things suggested by this little book. Although all intelligent persons cannot become botanists, not to know the wild flowers of our country is to be ignorant both of our country and ourselves. And this little book will, as a pocket companion during holiday rambles—the descriptions and plates being both good—destroy this ignorance in reference to at least a hundred plants. After mastering it, the student will be not a little astounded at his own learning, when he surveys it in the systematic chapter of contents."—Athenæum.

"A graceful little volume. The reader may be surprised to find how many flowers are properly considered wild, although they are constantly seen in cultivation. Mrs. Lankester's list comprises about a hundred, from the domestic poppy to the stately water-lily ; and each has its own portrait, carefully drawn and coloured from life, by a most painstaking and affectionate artist. It is the very book for an autumn ramble."—Illustrated Times.

Second Edition, much improved and enlarged. Fcap. 8vo. price 2s. 6d.
Fully illustrated.

Old Bones.

Or, Notes for Young Naturalists. By the Rev. W. S. SYMONDS, Rector of Pendock, Author of "Stones of the Valley," &c.

"Although modest in its plan, it is a very superior work—broad, exact, sufficiently explained by well-chosen examples, and amply illustrated."—Daily News.

"A small manual of palæontology, very carefully compiled, and likely to be very useful to those who have not the means to purchase or leisure to read Professor Owen's larger works."—Spectator.

"A well written and admirably illustrated manual for the student of natural history, and one which will no doubt become extensively popular."—Literary Gazette.

"Beautifully got up, judiciously condensed, and artistically arranged; to say nothing of its literary ability, which certainly bespeaks a close and shrewd observer."—Era.

"The plan pursued by Mr. Symonds is a very simple one. He adopts the classification of Professor Owen, and carries the young naturalist from family to family, beginning with man and ending with the lowest fishes, making his own remarks as he goes on. We recommend these notes. The volume is neatly got up, and deserves a sale amongst the class for whom it is intended."—Athenæum.

"Young naturalists cannot do better than possess themselves of a copy of 'Old Bones.' It is the work of an ardent lover of nature, with a mind richly stored with knowledge and high scientific acquirement."—Edinburgh Witness.

"The pleasing and highly-interesting style of Mr. Symonds's work is such, that no sooner is its perusal commenced, than the reader becomes gradually and imperceptibly entwined in the beauties of the subject, and willingly continues his course, until at last, upon reaching the concluding pages of the work, he finds that he has attained so complete a knowledge of the principles of one of the most interesting sciences, that he will feel an irresistible desire to pursue his studies to the highest possible point. We can unhesitatingly say that, from no work upon the subject which we have seen will an equal amount of information be obtained so entirely without labour, and in so short a time."—Mining Journal.

"A very useful little work, well calculated to afford information to the student of natural history."—Observer.

"We cannot conclude without recommending all with whom we have influence to purchase this wonderfully cheap and yet elegantly illustrated little volume."—Practical Farmers' Chronicle.

"To such of our readers as may be dabbling in the science, or may wish to have such a general knowledge of its outlines and acquaintance with its nomenclature as may enable them to take some interest in the many ways in which it meets them in their literature or social intercourse of the day, we cordially recommend the book. It is the work of a writer at once eloquent and scientific—a scientific man who has worked up his knowledge, not by manuals or short cuts, but by hard, practical, patient investigation of the thing which he describes.—a clergyman, who has studied nature without ever losing sight of nature's God."—Church Review.

Post 8vo. numerous illustrations, price 1s.

Photographs for the Magic Lantern;

How to Take and How to Show them. By SAMUEL HIGHLEY, F.G.S., F.C.S., &c. Being the subject matter of two Lectures delivered before the Photographic Society of London, and the Society of Arts, January, 1863.

Prof. Huxley's Lectures "On the Origin of Species."

1. The Present Condition of Organic Nature.—2. The Past Condition of Organic Nature.—3. The Method by which the Causes of the Present and Past Conditions of Organic Nature are to be discovered. A Critical Examination of the Position of Mr. Darwin's Work "On the Origin of Species," in relation to the complete Theory of the Causes of the Phenomena of Organic Nature.

"Readers who cannot accept Mr. Darwin's doctrines and conclusions will still be delighted with these lectures, since they embody so much curious information and so many important principles of biological science, expressed so clearly as to render the book, even to readers possessing scarcely any previous knowledge of the subject, not only intelligible but more interesting than any romance."—Weidon's Register.

Half-hours with the Microscope.

By EDWIN LANKESTER, M.D. Illustrated by 250 Drawings from Nature by Tuffen West.

CONTENTS.

Half-an-hour on Structure.	Half-an-hour at the Pond-side.
Half-an-hour in the Garden.	Half-an-hour at the Seaside.
Half-an-hour in the Country.	Half-an-hour In-doors.

Appendix.—The Preparation and Mounting of Objects.

"This wonderful anatomy of sight divides clearly one blood corpuscle from another; marks distinction from the blood of a fowl and that of a frog; separates the filaments of the finest plants; delineates the bearded hair of the sowthistle; makes a picture of vine or potato blight; pries into the hollow cells of the passion flower; and searches the warm depths of the poppy. Then it dignifies into isolation the minutest hair on the ear of a mouse, the mouth of a flea, the fang of a spider, the eye of a fly, the smallest particle that goes to make up a drift of swadown. Elementary Manuals of Science are seldom so well adapted to please, no less than to teach. The compiler of the volume has this conspicuous merit, that he deals with wonders, and never exaggerates them."—Athenæum.

"The beautiful little volume before us cannot be otherwise than welcome. It is in fact, a very complete manual for the amateur microscopist. . . . The 'Half-Hours' are filled with clear and agreeable descriptions, whilst eight plates, executed with the most beautiful minuteness and sharpness, exhibit no less than 250 objects with the utmost attainable distinctness."—Critic.

"It is a most interesting study only to observe how Nature in her smallest productions, develops the figures as well as the organization by which the functions of the largest animals and vegetable creations are performed. But the botanist, the physiologist, the zoologist, the anatomist, the geologist, and the chemist, may derive assistance from this book in accomplishing their several pursuits, and exploring the secret springs of the operations which they manipulate."—Morning Post.

"Contains some good advice as to the choice of specimens for examination, with a view of gaining an insight into the structure of plants and animals, and of turning a pleasant amusement into an interesting study. The collected specimens of natural objects are carefully described and illustrated by plates on a magnified scale. To such as are beginning the study, we can recommend this manual as a useful guide."—Economist.

"A whole profession is elevated when such creditable works are produced by any one of its members."—Dobell's Lectures.

"The work cannot fail to prove exceedingly instructive, either to the student or to those members of the profession who have not had an opportunity of keeping up their knowledge of the various discoveries which have been made of late years in renal pathology and therapeutics. . . . A very good digest of all that is known of any practical value upon the subject; and at the same time forms an excellent guide to enable the practitioner to discriminate the different forms of 'Bright's disease' during life, and thereby put him in a position to conduct the treatment on the soundest principles."—Glasgow Medical Journal.

"To the student who desires to know what possible or presumable explanations can at present be suggested of the origin of the various units in the complex series of morbid states therein included, Dr. Goodfellow's work may be recommended."—Lancet.

"We cannot but recommend it strongly to the profession as the result of thoroughly conscientious hard work, embodied in a form very interesting to the intelligent reader."—London Medical Review.

Prevention of Consumption

(Practical Observations on the); with Statistical Tables of the Prevalence of the Disease, and of the comparative Salubrity of various Places. By JOHN HOGG, M.D.

"Dr. Hogg appears to have bestowed much attention and thought much upon the causes and hygienic treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis. He strives to show that whilst deep and earnest study has been devoted to the etiology and pathology of the disease, to the nature and quality of tubercle, to the composition of the blood and of all the secretions of the body, its preventive treatment has not engaged the attention of physiologists as much as the importance of the subject demands. Dr. Hogg's work will afford the inquirer much valuable statistical information, and many hygienic hints in connection with pulmonary tuberculosis."—Lancet.

"It is a treatise full of sense and reason, and well worth reading and study."—Weekly Dispatch.

"A capital chapter on what to eat and drink."—Atlas.

The Influence of Railway Travel- ling on Public Health.

From the Lancet.

"We strongly recommend the work to all who are connected with the management of railways, or in the habit of travelling by them. The mass of evidence goes to prove that whilst the actual danger of life in travelling by rail is comparatively small, that to health is, from various causes, considerable. But for the discussion of these and their remedies, we must refer the reader to the book itself."—Dispatch.

Mangnall's Questions, Complete, 1s.

The Cheap Edition of this valuable School Book is now ready. It has been carefully revised and brought up to the present time. It is well printed and strongly bound.

"Published in a compact form, neatly bound, and being condensed without being abridged, comes before us in a greatly-improved form. Few books contain so much information in so small a space."—Portsmouth Guardian.

"A new edition, published at a small cost, of one of the best of our standard school-books; abridged from the general work, but not rendered less useful, as the curtailment has not decreased the number of questions, but merely got rid of superfluous descriptions."—Plymouth Herald.

"A most useful book for adults to refresh their memory. The present edition has been brought down to the present time, and includes a short biography of the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, Lord Raglan, and others."—Portsmouth Times.

"This popular school-book is here presented in a condensed rather than an abridged form, and with many marked improvements, at the low price of 1s.; it will no doubt come into general use."—Kent Herald.

"'Mangnall's Questions,' arranged as they are here, form one of the most useful school-books we have seen."—Sherborne Journal.

"A very good edition."—Cambridge Chronicle.

"To those engaged in tuition, and to many others, the work will be found highly useful."—Windsor Express.

"To praise this work is superfluous, since its merits are so widely known. The present edition is well got up in every respect."—Shrewsbury Journal.

"This is a cheap and improved edition of a valuable manual, for which we predict a decided preference over many other rudimental educational works of this class. An exceedingly welcome companion to all intrusted with the office of tutor."—Taunton Courier.

"'Mangnall's Questions' are amongst the most familiar and well-worn steps to knowledge. The edition issued by Mr. Hardwicke shows a reduction in bulk, but has been augmented in comprehensiveness."—Brighton Examiner.

"'Mangnall's Questions' have long since taken their place in the middle-class schools of the country, and the only ground on which they can ever be ejected is, that the lapse of time renders them defective or obsolete. Continued and careful editorship is therefore necessary; and this editorship the present edition has received."—Sunderland Times.

Vegetable Charcoal.

Its Medicinal and Economic properties, with practical remarks on its use in chronic affections of the Stomach and Bowels. By JAMES BIRD, M.R.C.S.

Hardwicke's Elementary Books.

PRICE TWOPENCE EACH.

UNDER the above title is presented to the Public a complete Library of Elementary Works adapted for the use of the People.

Thousands of people at present skilled as handicraftsmen, and as workers in the various arts and sciences of life, work from day to day, plodding on with some vague notion that they can improve their own particular calling; but it generally ends in nothing, because they are ignorant of the first principles of those laws which regulate the things in which they are engaged. It is a very rare occurrence to meet with workmen who know anything beyond what they picked up in their apprenticeship, or obtained by imitating others more skilled than themselves.

It will be the aim of HARDWICKE'S ELEMENTARY BOOKS to teach these first principles.

No labour or expense will be spared to make the information of a thoroughly reliable character; and, where advisable, a free use of authentic illustrations will be brought to bear.

Method for Teaching Plain Needlework in Schools.

By a Lady.

It is a constant source of complaint that servants know not how to work well at their needle, and those who visit their poorer neighbours lament the total ignorance in this respect; many cannot cut out or make even so simple an article as a child's pin-cloth. Many causes combine to produce this result; the almost universal plan of allowing children to remain in the same order for needlework as for the reading and other lessons, is one great reason why girls make so little progress. It is a custom also in some schools to employ the girls only in some one branch in which they may happen to succeed best; a few only doing all the gathering; some all the stitching; others all the button-holes; and so on. The work thus done, of course, brings credit both to the school and to the mistress; but the child who can hem-stitch a fine cambric pocket-handkerchief at school, cannot, when she returns home in the evening give her parents any practical proof of the value of the instruction she has received, for she can neither make their shirts nor mend their stockings.

We often hear that a school was at one time noted for its superior needlework, but that succeeding mistresses have not kept it up to the same standard. Such would not be the case if a regular system were observed. It is rarely the custom in schools in this age, to teach the children to fix and prepare their own work,—a short-sighted policy; for the want of this knowledge not only entails much additional labour on the mistress, but makes the children comparatively useless away from school.

This useful method is based on steps which are gradual, well-defined, and clear to the perception. It is calculated to insure the improvement of each individual child, and, while it offers the necessary instruction to the less talented pupil, it enables the more clever one to attain the highest degree of perfection.

The County Families of the United Kingdom.

Or, Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland, containing a brief notice of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, and Appointments of each Person, his Heir Apparent or Presumptive, as also a Record of the Offices which he has hitherto held, together with his Town Address and Country Residences. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, and Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain.

"We find in this most convenient handbook the living representatives of those who have earned rank for themselves and for their descendants. We have records of the military or naval services in the titles of Wellington, Marlborough, Howden, Amherst, Anglesey, Cadogan, Charlemont, Cathcart, Dartmouth, Dorchester, Gardner, Gough, Hardinge, Harris, Hill, Huntly, Keane, Powis, Raglan, Seaton, Stamford, Stanhope, Stratford, Vivian, Nelson, St. Vincent, Camperdown, De Saumarez, Hood, Exmouth, Hawke, Mulgrave, and Sandwich. Official services are represented by Clifford, Albemarle, Dunfermline, Sidmouth, Congleton, Glenelg, Holland, Lauderdale, Monteagle, Onslow, Oxford, Melville, Ripon, Salisbury, Shannon, and Sydney. Success in commerce and trade is represented in Fitzwilliam, Leigh, Petre, Darnley, Carrington, Overstone, Leeds, Craven, Greville, Radnor, Ducie, Pomfret, Tankerville, Dormer, Coventry, Romney, Dudlow, Dacres, and Aabburton. Political services have elevated Lowther and Massarene; diplomatic services, Berwick, Cowley, Durham, Malmesbury, Granville, Harrington, Heytesbury, Rivers, and Stratford de Redcliffe. The fortunate lawyers have contributed Tenterden, Thurlow, Eldon, Plunket, Redeford, Rosslyn, Walsingham, Campbell, Stratheden, St. Leonards, Lyndhurst, Truro, Ellenborough, North, Hardwicke, Cottenham, Cowper, Kenyon, Lovelace, Manchester, and Manners. The 'Romance of the Peerage' is written in titles such as these. The mercer, the skinner, and the silk-merchant, the merchant tailor, the draper, the wool-stapler, the cloth-worker, the Calais or Cheapside merchant, the banker, the jeweller, the goldsmith, and the apothecary (Smithson), like the gallant admiral, the general, and the gentlemen of the long robe or of red tape, have, when enterprising and energetic, founded noble families."—Literary Gazette.

"It possesses advantages which no other work of the kind that we know of has offered hitherto. Containing all that is to be found in others, it furnishes information respecting families of distinction which are not to be found in the latter. It will prove to be invaluable in the library and drawing-room."—Spectator.

"To produce such a work in the perfection which characterises 'County Families,' must have been an almost Herculean task. It is sufficient for us to say that accuracy even in the minutest details appears to have been the aim of Mr. Walford, and the errors are so few and slight, that they may readily be passed over."—Weekly Register.

How to Address Titled People.

COMPANION TO THE WRITING-DESK ; or, How to Address, Begin, and End Letters to Titled, and Official Personages, together with Tables of Precedence, copious list of Abbreviations, Rules for Punctuation, and other useful information.

"A word, and more than a word, of praise is due to the Companion to the Writing-Desk. Full information on every subject of importance to correspondents is afforded in it. The instructions on official points will not fail to be of importance to many persons unable to obtain the proper information from even much larger works of the same kind."—Court Journal.

"This is one of the most useful little books we have for a long time seen."—Era,

"This is a capital shilling's worth—useful, elegant, indispensable. For young authors it will prove an able and reliable guide."—Weekly Chronicle.

"A book which every one wants sometimes—some persons often."—Wesleyan Times.

"This pretty little volume, admirably printed, contains as much information on the subjects comprised within the scope indicated by the title-page as could well be condensed into so petit a form, and we have no doubt it will lie with many a carefully-concealed but often-consulted copy of 'Johnson' for, somehow, people do not like to acknowledge the necessity for referring to works of this class. There are few who do not sometimes feel the want of a book of this kind at hand."—Penny Newsman.

MR. PLANCHÉ'S Work on Heraldry. With more than 200 Illustrations from the most authentic sources.

Heraldry founded on Facts.

OR, The Pursuivant of Arms, by J. R. PLANCHÉ, Rouge Croix. Second edition, with additional Notes and Illustrations.

"We welcome this volume as one of the many signs of an extending conviction of the practical utility of an acquaintance with early heraldry. It is an attempt to separate the chaff from the wheat, and to arrive at a knowledge of the usage of armorials from facts only ; discarding not only the fancies and puerile conceits of Gerard Legh, and those of the same school, both in past and present times, but also such as are found in the Book of St. Alban's, and the less imaginative treatises of Upton and De Bado Aureo. An excellent design is this, and well worthy of being fully carried into execution."—Journal of the Archaeological Institute.

The Common Sense of the Water Cure.

A Popular Description of Life and Treatment at a Hydropathic Establishment. By Captain J. H. LUKIS, late of the 61st Regiment, and the North Durham Militia.

"We have seldom read a more amusing book than this. Capt. Lukis is a clever well-bred gentleman, who has found the greatest pleasure of his life in the strict discipline of hydropathy, and in this volume he chats pleasantly about his own experiences, and puts in a very popular form the chief arguments in favour of the water cure. There is not a dull page in the book."—Morning Herald.

Waste Products and Undeveloped Substances ;

Or, Hints for Enterprise in Neglected Fields. By P. L. SIMMONDS, Author of "Products of the Vegetable Kingdom," &c.

"As mere reading, the Volume is interesting and instructive; but we must go further, and say there are fortunes to be got out of it by those who rightly work some of its suggestions."—Builder.

"A very useful and instructive volume, it shows to how great an extent substances considered as waste or useless may be turned to good account."—Observer.

"Altogether an admirable little volume, perspicuously and tersely written, and will make many who read it open their eyes with wonder at the neglected wealth which surrounds them, and at the carelessness of mankind in neglecting it."—Daily News.

"An extremely interesting and useful volume."—Standard.

"The papers are treated in such a manner as to form not merely an interesting, but an instructive contribution to the stock of popular literature, and the volume is therefore a welcome contribution to our current literature."—Observer.

"The 'Curiosities of Civilization' contained so many amusing and important details, that a second selection will be accepted at once with the utmost gratification by the many readers who have already been fascinated by Dr. Wynter's agreeable style, and the characteristic details of men and manners by which he has rendered his name popular. Sometimes the first dish is more palatable than the second,—the newest entremet serving to take off the pleasant taste of its predecessor. In this instance it is not so, since Dr. Wynter has kept back the better portion for a second course."—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

"Crowded with facts and sparkling with fancy; written in a cheerful and philosophic spirit. The writer is never unapproachable in his ideal, but shrewd, sensible, and thoughtful in his mode of narration and in his way of marshalling facts."—Literary Gazette.

"On the whole, we prefer this volume as a book of amusement, and even instruction, to the 'Curiosities of Civilization,' which has enjoyed a good name and sale. Dr. Wynter is an accomplished and well-informed man; he writes well, has much to tell, and even his lightest sketches convey substantial thoughts or facts in their delicate outlines. This volume contains more than forty papers gleaned from first-rate periodicals. It would have been a literary loss had they not been so gathered and preserved. Sometimes there is a quaintness in some of the essays which recalls the immortal Charles Lamb."—Era.

"These papers are characterized by the same breadth of view, the same felicity of language, the same acuteness of thought, which distinguished the 'Curiosities of Civilization.' So long as Dr. Wynter continues to write papers similar to those in the volume before us, and in 'Curiosities of Civilization,' so long will the republication of those papers be welcomed by the public."—Standard.

"We shall look in vain, for example, two centuries back, for anything like an equivalent to the volume before us. Some of the articles are mainly derived from observations made in the course of professional studies; others are at least cognate to the subjects which occupy a physician's hourly thoughts; all are more or less instructive as to certain phases of our civilization, and the strange elements it holds in suspension. Some of the incidents are of unparalleled magnitude, quite as striking as anything contained in the wonder-books of our ancestors."—Times.

"Dr. Wynter's papers show that he has made deep researches, and that he brings to bear upon them the acumen of a well-stored mind—a perfect kaleidoscopic array of subjects."—Morning Post.

"Dr. Wynter has both industry and skill. He investigates all branches of his subjects, and tells us the result easily and unaffectedly. In short, a better book of miscellaneous reading has not come under our notice for a long while."—Daily News.

"One of the most amusing and best-executed works of its kind that ever came under our notice. Every subject that Dr. Wynter handles, even if it refers to scientific matters, is ground down so very fine, that it is hardly competent to human stupidity to fail to understand it."—Saturday Review.

"These articles form a delightful inventory of facts, in which every reader has a direct personal interest, for they are such as may or do affect him and his at every moment of their lives, and collectively they form a very curious insight into the anatomy of some parts of our civilization past and present. Seldom have the fruits of so much labour been converted into more easy and pleasant reading."—Spectator.

"It would have been a pity if so much that is useful and entertaining had been entombed in the pages of a review. The subject-matter was worthy of being put into a book, and we are glad that it is done."—Illustrated News.

"The Essays are thirteen in number, and form a very delightful, instructive work. It contains many good pictures of London life, and a knowledge of this gigantic metropolis scarcely surpassed by any modern writer."—Press.

"Among the various Essays by eminent and brilliant writers, none surpass Dr. Wynter in instructiveness, amusing information, and easy cleverness of style. If any one 'wants to know' how our great Babylon is supplied, with unerring certainty and sound calculation, with food and drink, day after day and year after year; how that food is systematically and universally doctored and adulterated; how our thieves operate, flourish, come to grief, and are affected by the police who are employed to detect or capture them; how men are slowly murdered by unhealthy trades, and how the professions kill or keep alive their members; how fires influence fire insurance, and fire insurance influences fires; how and what sort of people dwell in lunatic asylums; how many romantic and least-imagined things can be learnt by studying the shipwrecks which have occurred during the last few years; how—but we will stop, and simply add, that whoever wants a fiende book this winter, rich in useful facts, and written in a manner clear, fascinating, and original, had better purchase Dr. Wynter's Curiosities of Civilization."—Mining Review.

Dr. Lankester on Food.

A Course of Lectures delivered at the South Kensington Museum.
By E. LANKESTER, M.D., F.R.S., F.L.S.

Part I., One Shilling, contains :

WATER.

SALT.

HEAT-GIVERS — OIL, BUTTER,
FAT.

FLESH-FORMERS—ANIMAL FOOD.

Part II., Eightpence, contains :

ALCOHOL.

WINES, SPIRITS, and BEER.

CONDIMENTS and SPICES.

TEA, COFFEE, and CHOCOLATE.

TOBACCO and OPIUM.

"Full of sound science, curious anecdote, and quaint illustration. Dr. Lankester has a singular power of illustrative keenness; and in the discursive lessons which he delivers on so many subjects, there is an overflowing wealth of minute collateral information which is always brought to the level of the last achievements of science."—Lancet.

"The lectures possess the great merit of being interesting. The information, although it may be gathered from sources not inaccessible to those who will read for themselves, is brought together and arranged with the intelligence of a man who thoroughly understands and performs what he intends to do. The facts thus presented gain an additional value by bearing the impress and sanction of his own opinions. There is no pretence about these lectures. The style is clear and pleasant; and, for a work of general information on a subject interesting to everybody, these Lectures on Food will be useful and popular. They contain information which every one ought to possess; and there is skill shown in giving as much information as is necessary, and no more than is desirable. Dr. Lankester has fulfilled the task he proposed to himself with judgment and success."—Athenæum.

"A volume such as this must needs be one of the very best of its kind; and it is so. It is a work full of amusement and instruction. Dr. Lankester's very suggestive and interesting book leads us to forget both our limits and our time; and we must now take leave of it with a strong recommendation to readers of all classes to purchase, peruse, and re-peruse it at their best hours of leisure."—Builder.

"Dr. Lankester's style is so facile and attractive, that we know of no writer more capable of bringing dry subjects before the public mind in an acceptable form. Many, therefore, who open this volume will be carried away by the pleasure of perusal into a study of useful facts, which they little dreamt of troubling themselves about."—Era.

"These admirable lectures were delivered for the purpose of exhibiting, in a popular form, the scientific principles by which the supply of food for man is regulated; and this they do in the clearest and most captivating manner possible, being almost wholly free from technicalities, and giving useful directions, the reasonableness of which is apparent at a glance. The book will be read with great pleasure even where there is no idea of making any practical use of the information it contains; but, in the hands of the intelligent and thoughtful man it would be an invaluable guide in matters of diet, enabling him to do much, under the Divine blessing, towards the preservation of his own health, and towards the building up of his children in strength and vigour."—Patriot.

350 pp. crown 8vo., cloth, fully illustrated, price 3s.

"Every one who peruses them will be grateful to the author. The history of those creatures whose products become through man's skill so useful to him, is given with such charming feeling, that the interest of the reader is attracted and enchained, whether he wills or no."—Era.

"They are written so plainly and pleasantly, that even children can understand and profit by them ; and we can therefore strongly recommend them."—Critic.

"The plan of Dr. Lankester is simple and philosophical. He first introduces us to the animal, then what portion of it used for the manufacture described, and lastly the manufacture is described."—Atlas.

"A fund of information of so attractive a character, as to captivate and enchain the attention of even the most illiterate."—Weekly Times.

"These lectures explain the nature and object of those animal products employed in the uses of daily life in a popular and pleasing manner, and is accompanied by numerous illustrations, which heighten the value of the book. It is a good book for the young, and instructive to readers of all ages."—City Press.

Graceful Riding.

A Pocket Manual for Equestrians. By S. C. WAITE.

"In the school, on the road, on the course, or across country, this little book will be invaluable; and we heartily recommend it."—Morning Post.

"Contains a vast number of useful directions and hints to all who wish to acquire a sure and graceful seat and sure hand. The engravings are well executed and assist the reader in understanding the letter-press."—Field.

"Designed to give the timid and nervous of both sexes instructions on the management of saddle horses and the proper mode of mounting and dismounting, holding the reins, and such other advice as will be of great service to lady equestrians."—Press.

"Advice to ladies forms a separate and important part of Mr. Waite's manual, and is marked by a very great degree of good sense."—Daily News.

Fcap. 8vo. cloth, illustrated, price 2s. 6d.

The Foot and its Covering.

With Dr. Camper's work on "The Best Form of Shoe," translated from the German. By JAMES DOWIE.

"A very sensible treatise, by one who takes an artistic and scientific interest in his subject, and who has evidently well studied the mechanical structure and action, as well as the anatomy and physiology, of that wonderful concatenation of bones, sinews, and muscles—the human foot."—Builder.

"To all pedestrians it must be an object to have an easy shoe, and in the present day of universal military ardour and hebdomadal marchings out, this little contribution may prove a useful adviser upon the subject."—Lancet.

With coloured Frontispiece. 16mo. cloth, gilt edges, price 2s. 6d.

Whist.

The Laws and Practice of Whist. By CÆLEUS. As played at the London Clubs.

"It is just the book that was required. The intrinsic worth of the book is to be found in the downright sensible practical advice contained throughout its pages, and to the lover of whist we strongly recommend the volume."—Field.

"After our repeated commendations of this little work, we need only express our opinion that it is, par excellence, the guide for every whist player. The laws laid down having been adopted by the Army and Navy Club and other clubs of London, as the court of appeal, sufficiently indicate their authority, and the public generally may rely upon them with confidence."—Era.

"There is no doubt this is the best treatise upon the subject extant, because modern play and the short game have added so much to the old lore, that Hoyle, and even Mathews and Major A——, are now quite antiquated."—Critic.

"The title-page of this little pocket volume claims for it the praise due to an easy and comprehensive guide to everything worth seeing and hearing in and around the metropolis, and states that it is compiled from authentic sources and personal inquiry. From the examination which we have been able to make of the little brochure, this promise seems to be very fairly fulfilled; and we cannot do better than recommend this reasonable little manual to the waistcoat pockets of the sight-seers who come up to London. There are sixteen neat illustrations to accompany the letter-press of the volume."—Critic.

"A compendious and useful guide to the principal places of interest in and around London. Excellent woodcuts have been added, to give completeness to this volume."—Atlas.

"This is the most portable, complete, and the cheapest guide-book of London that has ever been issued, and contains a brief account of every place that by any courtesy can be called a lion of the metropolis, while the illustrations that accompany so many of the descriptions, though small, have the rare advantage of being most accurate representations."—Era.

"The foreigner or provincial visitor to the metropolis will find this cheap guide-book as useful as anything pocketable could be for the purpose. Every place in London and the vicinity that is worth seeing is here described, and made accessible by the details of ways and means for getting to it."—Globe.

"This book has a very proper title. In every sense of the word it is a handy book—a book capable of doing what it professes to do, to guide its possessor to all places of note in the great city of the world, London. All those who wish to see London as it really is, should purchase it."—City Press.

Autobiography of a Working-man.

By ALEXANDER SOMERVILLE, "One who has whistled at the plough."

"A book to be read with great interest, not merely as affording insights into worlds which persons of the middle classes visit far too sparingly, but also as offering a picture of character. Mr. Somerville's early life is attractive, as a piece of Scottish character and scenery worthy of its place in a national biography."—Athenæum.

"The well-known author of this work, who has attracted much public attention and has acquired a well-merited reputation, has done the public a great service in publishing his Autobiography. It adds one, in the first part, to the many genuine and affecting pictures we now possess of the difficulties with which the virtuous poor manfully struggle in order to bring up a family decently; and it is full of rich instruction on the manner in which those difficulties that all share, knit the hearts of young and old in one common bond of affection and virtuous help. Those who pretend to pity such people should study the book, and learn from it how superior in dignity, how far above them, elevated in manhood's best virtues, are such cheerful, struggling, virtuous, God-fearing families."—Economist.

A QUARTERLY MISCELLANY OF ENTERTAINING & INSTRUCTIVE ARTICLES ON SCIENTIFIC SUBJECTS.

EDITED BY JAMES SAMUELSON.

This periodical does not partake of the character of the abstruse "Quarterlies," or the "Transactions" of Scientific Societies; nor is it, on the other hand, framed simply for the amusement of those who desire to employ Science as a mere pastime. Its contents are addressed to those numerous readers who, without making any pretensions to rank among the learned, desire to become acquainted with the truths of science; a pursuit which they are frequently deterred from following, by the abstruse language in vogue amongst scientific men, or from the nature of their ordinary avocations being too laborious and engrossing to allow of close study during leisure hours.

Each number contains systematic, instructive articles (illustrated when needful) on subjects connected with some of the following sciences, viz. :—

ASTRONOMY.
BOTANY.
CHEMISTRY.
ETHNOLOGY.

GEOGRAPHY.
GEOLOGY.
METALLURGY.
MICROSCOPY.

MINERALOGY.
PHYSICS.
ZOOLOGY.
&c. &c., and

SCIENCE applied to the Arts, Manufactures, Commerce, and Agriculture, together with a Complete Summary of all the events of importance which have taken place during the quarter in each department of Science.

THE collecting of Postage Stamps is a fashion not confined to this country, or to a single class; for collections are frequently to be seen in the drawing-room of the luxurious, in the study of the enlightened, and the locker of the schoolboy.

The fashion has been ridiculed, as all fashions will be; but if postage stamps are properly studied, collected, and arranged, there is no reason why they may not be quite as instructive and entertaining as the collection of birds, butterflies, shells, books, engravings, coins, or other objects.

The use and charm of collecting any kind of object is to educate the mind and the eye to careful observation, accurate comparison, and just reasoning on the differences and likenesses which they present, and to interest the collector in the design or art shown in their creation or manufacture, and the history of the country which produces or uses the objects collected. The postage stamps afford good objects for all these branches of study, as they are sufficiently different to present broad outlines for their classification; and yet some of the variations are so slight that they require minute examination and comparison to prevent them from being overlooked; and the fact of obtaining stamps from so many countries suggests to ask what were the circumstances that induced their adoption, the history of the countries which issue them, and the understanding why some countries have considered it necessary, in so few years as have passed since they first came into use, to make so many changes in the form or design of the stamp used, while other countries, like Holland, have never made the slightest change.

The changes referred to all mark some historical event of importance; such as the accession of a new king, a change in the form of government, or the absorption of a smaller state into some larger one, a change in the currency, or some other revolution. Hence a collection of postage stamps may be considered, like a collection of coins, an epitome of the history of Europe and America for the last quarter of a century; and at the same time, as they exhibit much variation in design and in execution, as a collection of works of art on a small scale, showing the style of art of the countries that issue them; while the size of the collection, and the manner in which they are arranged and kept, will show the industry, judgment, neatness, and taste of the collector, who should always bear in mind that every accessory that is showy and bright takes away from the appearance and interest of the stamps themselves.

The full use of the stamps in teaching geography and history can only be obtained when they are arranged in systematic and chronological order. This has unfortunately not been seen by many compilers of catalogues and collectors, who place their stamps of the different countries alphabetically, thus separating the stamps of neighbouring countries of the same royal house, of the same language, or kind of money, into different parts of their collection. Many of these compilers and collectors have not been consistent with themselves, and arranged their collections partly geographically and partly alphabetically: this is even less instructive and more difficult to consult, as it is not easy to recollect how the stamps follow each other.

I began to collect postage stamps shortly after the system was established and before it had become a rage, as I took a great interest in their use and extension; as I believe I was the first who proposed, in 1834, the system of a small uniform rate of postage to be prepaid by stamps, having satisfied my own mind that the great cost of the Post Office was not the reception, carriage, and delivery of the letters, but the complicated system of accounts that the old system required; and having learned from the best writers on political economy that the collection of money by stamps was the most certain and economical. It was, in fact, the mere application of the system used with regard to newspapers to letters in general.

I found, after considerable trouble, that there was little, or, indeed, I may say no chance of getting attention to the plans suggested, without I could devote the whole of my time and energy to the agitation and development of it, which was not consistent with my position in the British Museum,—an institution to which I had from a youth devoted my energies.

Fortunately Mr. (now Sir) Rowland Hill, who had leisure at his command by the dissolution of the South Australian Company, in 1837, published several pamphlets on a similar plan, and with the assistance of Mr. G. Moffatt, Mr. Henry Cole, Mr. Dillon, and sundry merchants and members of Parliament, whom they succeeded in interesting in the question, they carried the measure after very great exertion; and it has been a very great success, not only in a financial point of view, but also in what I considered a more important one, in spreading education and domestic intercourse among the people at large, and thereby increasing the happiness and well-being of the community.

Large as is the balance carried to the Revenue from the Post Office, the system proposed by me, and that propounded by Mr. Rowland Hill in his pamphlet, and which he and the other advocates of the change recommended before the Parliamentary and other Committees, have never been completely carried out; consequently a large staff of clerks and other officials is still retained at the Post Office, at a large expense, to keep the complicated accounts that a few unpaid letters require, which, if the system were fully carried out, would not be necessary.

I am aware that the prepayment of all letters by stamp is very difficult, if not impossible, to be carried out; but this is not necessary. There is no necessity for any account of unpaid letters to be kept, except in cases where the official suspects some unfair play; otherwise it might be left for the postmaster, through whose hands the unstamped letter last passes, to place the requisite stamps upon it, and to collect the cost of those stamps from the person to whom the letter is directed. This he is likely to do with care, as each postmaster is allowed a commission on all the stamps he sells; and to prevent, as much as possible, the sending of letters that would require this treatment, the system of paying double postage, or even a higher fine, should be enforced on all letters not paid for in stamps before they are despatched. It is said that the postmaster may lose, as many of the letters on which he has placed stamps may be refused. If so, they would be returned to the Dead-letter Office, and his stamps allowed for; but this will not be often requisite, as the Post Office can now enforce the payment against the sender if it be refused by the person to whom the letter is directed.

The postage prepaid by stamps has been adopted, as this list will prove, by many other countries, and has been extended into other branches of the Government and the law courts. It is also used in the electric telegraph companies, and in several errand and carrier companies in Europe and America.

Oddly enough, some collectors place the stamps used by the Hamburg and American private carrier companies with their postage stamps. This catalogue is confined to stamps issued by government post-offices; for if those used by private establishments were to be included, it would be difficult to define the limit.*

While the subject was under discussion, an envelope was proposed surrounded by an engine-turned border, with the value and the weight it would carry marked in the corner; and during the discussion in Parliament various stamped covers were circulated by the advocates of the plan, to show the kind of envelope and stamp which they proposed should be used. They are now rare, and only to be seen in the albums of the wives and children of the members of the committee who preserved them.

In 1840, when the new system was established, two printed envelopes were issued bearing a design by Mulready, the Royal Academician, "with the hopes of spreading the taste for high art;"

* See A. Trollope's "North America," vol. ii., p. 367.

but they called forth such an outburst of ridicule, and such a number of caricatures, that they were soon disused; and then the engraved profile of the Queen was adopted as an adhesive stamp for affixing on letters, and after some time an embossed profile of the Queen was issued, stamped on paper as an envelope.

When the first adhesive stamps were issued they were printed in black ink; but it was found difficult to properly obliterate them either with black or red ink, and they were afterwards issued printed in different coloured ink, so that they can all be obliterated with the same black hand or machine stamp.

Some of the colonies commenced with manufacturing their own stamps, and used emblematic designs, as "Hope reclining," for the Cape of Good Hope; a "Swan," for Swan River; the "Queen on her Throne," for Victoria; but by degrees they have generally adopted a simple profile of the Queen, like the English; and the stamps now used in the colonies, and indeed in many parts of the world, are not only designed and engraved, but also printed or embossed, in England. Many of these are executed by Messrs. De la Rue & Co., of Bunhill Row, who call themselves, in the Directory, "Envelope Makers and Manufacturers of Government and Colonial Adhesive Stamps;" and Perkins, Bacon, & Co., in Fleet Street, "Bond and Bank Note Engravers." They are printed in these establishments under the supervision of an officer of the Inland Revenue department, or an inspector appointed by the Colonial governments.

The majority of foreign governments, as they have adopted the system, have also adopted the profile or portrait of their sovereign for the stamp. Other governments use the arms of the state or sovereign for the purpose.

Some states, which began by merely using a number surrounded by a more or less complicated frame as a stamp, have gradually adopted the royal portrait.

In England, the manner in which the stamps have been obliterated has undergone many changes; now they are obliterated by a block, which, by the form of the internal disk, and the number in it, marks the postal district in which it was originally stamped. Each Continental state obliterates in its own manner; several have undergone considerable change during the time the stamps have been in use. In France they not only obliterate with a hand-stamp, but the stamp used has acute prominences on it, so as to perforate the stamp when they obliterate it. The study of the means employed for this simple purpose affords an interesting object of contemplation.

In some of the outlying offices in India, Ceylon, &c., the stamp is obliterated by the sender with a pen and ink before the letter is despatched.

In most countries the adhesive stamp and the envelope stamp are different,—the one being printed from a surface, and the other embossed; this is even the case in Prussia, where the design of the two stamps are the same; but, lately, Austria has issued the same embossed design both as a denticulated adhesive stamp and as an envelope. In a few localities the envelopes are only stamped with a simple hand-stamp.

In England the Stamp Office will place an embossed stamp on any paper that is sent to them for that purpose. So that the embossed stamps are circulated in very different forms and kinds of paper. They also permit embossed rings with the name of a firm, as Smith, Elder, & Co., and others, to be printed at the same time and in the same manner as the stamp; and stamps so circulated have been regarded as distinct kinds of stamps, when in fact they are only means of advertisement used by certain private firms.

The first English adhesive stamps were printed with black ink, and obliterated first with black and then with red ink. This was found inconvenient, and since then they have been printed with red and blue inks, and obliterated with black.

Some few stamps, as the old 4 anna stamp of India, the "too late" and "registered" stamps of South Australia, the stamps of some of the Swiss Cantons, and some of the more modern embossed stamps of the United States, are printed in inks of two colours.

The Russian and Polish adhesive stamps are printed in three colours. They are the most beautiful stamps that have yet been issued.

Some of the German States issued their first stamps printed in black ink on different coloured papers; but they have, one after another, given up the practice, and now issue the stamps printed with different coloured inks on white paper. Some of them, as Hanover, print the stamps with black ink, or, rarely, coloured ink, on white paper, and then cover the whole stamp with a coloured network.

The different German States seem to have changed the colour of the paper or the ink with which they printed the stamps at different times very capriciously, hence the same stamp occurs of very different colours. They are said to have adopted a uniform colour for stamps of the same value, thus:—

- 4 pfennige, or  $\frac{1}{2}$  silbr. gr., or 1 kr. Green.
- 6 pfennige, or  $\frac{1}{2}$  silbr. gr. Orange.
- 1 silbr. gr., or 3 kr. Red.
- 2 silbr. gr., or 6 kr. Blue.
- 3 silbr. gr., or 9 kr. Brown.

The dies, before they are used, are often proved, by regulation of the Stamp Office, with a different coloured ink from that under which they are legally issued; some of these proofs have got into collections: they are called essai in the French catalogue; translated by some—essays!

The Australian Colonies sometimes send out the same stamps of different shades of colour.

For these reasons, I have not considered any change in the colour of the stamp as a different stamp; for it is certainly the same, whether it is on green or white paper, or printed in black, red, or green ink.

Formerly, some of these stamps were printed from copper-plates; but now, almost all the stamps are printed from wooden or metal blocks; the metal blocks being all struck from a single die, and then placed in a frame containing a certain number of stamps; the blocks are inked with rollers like letter-press printing, which is far more economical, both in labour and time. The die of the embossed stamps is inked on the surface; hence it is the sunken part that is coloured, while the raised part is the original colour of the paper. This fact has not been sufficiently observed, for some stamps, which differed in this respect, have been regarded as belonging to the same type.

In England, the adhesive stamps are printed on paper with a peculiar water-mark, different in the various stamps; and the envelopes issued by the English Stamp Office are all printed on a peculiar paper. Formerly there were three lines of coloured silk inserted in the paper, so as to form a line across the stamp; and several foreign governments adopted the same plan. It has now been disused in England and Germany; but in the latter they print in small letters, the value of the envelope, in three lines, over the stamp, thus: Post couvert, Drei groschen; Ein groschen, Post couvert.

In Russia, the envelopes are embossed on paper prepared for the purpose, with the Russian spread eagle for a water-mark, with different patterns according to the value.

In England, the regulation is that the stamp should be placed on the upper right-hand corner of the letter or envelope.

In Saxony, Hanover, Baden, Brunswick, and Austria the stamp was formerly placed on the left-hand side of the envelope; now, they are usually placed, as in England, on the upper right-hand corner. In some lists and collections these are considered different stamps.

In Russia, the stamps of the envelopes are placed on the flap of the envelope; and in the Brazils, the stamps are used as a seal; this causes them sometimes to be overlooked by the English Post Office.

Most of the English colonies have the name of country that issues them marked on the stamp. Several foreign countries have adopted the same plan, but, as they are often in a foreign tongue, it is necessary to translate the names into the English one used in this catalogue, thus:—

Bayern , Bavaria.	Preussen , Prussia.
Braunschweig , Brunswick.	Parmensi , Parma.
IONIƘON KPATOΣ, Ionian Islands.	Sachsen , Saxony.
EAA, Greece.	S. P. B., St. Petersburg.
Estensi , Modena.	Sicilia , Sicily.
Mejico , Mexico.	Sverige , Sweden.
Modenensi , Modena.	Toscana , Tuscany.
Neapolitana , Naples.	U. S., United States.
Nov. Camb. Aust. , New South Wales.	Warszawska , Warsaw.
Norge , Norway.

The name of the coin marked on stamps is interesting, and may lead, in cases where the name is not marked on them, to the discovery of their origin.

This list is confined to the postage stamps which are issued by the different governments.

I have therefore excluded the stamps issued by different private persons or companies who carry letters or parcels, or electric telegraph messages, and which have found it convenient to issue stamps. They are no more postage stamps than the stamps issued by the Inland Revenue Office for fiscal purposes.

There will not be found in it the stamps issued by Hamer's Hamburg Boten, the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, or the different City expresses; or errand and carrier offices of the United States, which have often been regarded as postage stamps, and entered as such in the lists published by different persons. They would doubtless form an interesting collection by themselves, showing how convenient the collecting of revenue by stamps has been found.

The desire which some persons have to show stamps that are not in other collections has induced the dealers to produce pretended stamps, which have no real existence; as, for example, a French stamp with the portrait of the Republic, inscribed, Essai, 1858, which is after the "Empire" was established; or Turkish stamps, inscribed 6 Truze and 3 Mara, the Turkish Government not having as yet issued any stamps. Some collectors show Chinese stamps, which are only the impression of the seal of the mandarin who sent the letter. In the same manner, and for the same purpose, the colours of some stamps are artificially changed by soaking in water or some chemical fluid, or the stamps are covered over with a wash of colour, or the paper on which they are printed is stained. Some of the stamps that were issued by the Provisional Government that followed the outbreak in Europe of 1848 have been withdrawn from circulation, and become rare, and therefore sell at a large price; this has induced some French dealers in them to have them imitated or forged. They are known from the real stamps, as they are lithograph, while the originals were block-printed.

The postage stamps are extensively used in this country as a species of paper money. To facilitate this use, the post-offices throughout this country have lately been directed to receive postage stamps, at a small discount, from any one that may present them in a clean state and more than two united together.

During the terrible Civil conflict in the late "United States" they form almost the only currency of small value in circulation; and the Government issued them without being gummed for the purpose of their being so used, as it was found that the gummed stamps were apt to adhere together when carried and handled. They have lately issued postage stamps printed on larger paper, with long directions, under the title of Postage Currency, for 5 and 10 cents. "Act approved, July 17, 1862."

After the English name of the country or place where the stamp is issued, follows the foreign name of the place, or title of the king, or other inscription that may be on the stamps of that locality. In the description of the individual stamps, the lettering which is on the stamps is printed in italic. The list is arranged geographically, commencing with those of Great Britain and her colonies, and each country in succession, with its colonies or dependencies.
