LORD CHEYLESMORE'S MEZZOTINTS Bl JCLA FRANKAL

Lord Cheylesmore is a specialist. Less eclectic than many of our best known collectors, be has, by concentrating the entire power of a cultured taste and a definite desire on one single (Wject, become not only the authority on states, conditions, and a!l the minutiæe that belong to his fascinating hobby, but also the happy possessor of a priceless and unique series of eighteenth century mezzotints, representing not only art, but society; mot only history, but pulicy and the intrigues of state. He has sathered around him the epitome of fifty years, fifty years rich and full with youth and beauty, with promise and fulfiment, the very efforescence of our civilisation.

And although these articles refer more particularly to collections than to collectors, I may be forgiven, jerhaps, for the arknowledgment of a charming courtesy that permits the freest access to these accumulated treasures, and a noteworthy modesty that deprecates the position that his knowlelge has made inevitable.

Lord Cheylesmore has been collecting engravings for a quarter of a century, but time has taken nothing from the freshness of the interest with which he cherishes and adds to his prints. The unreasonable eagerness of the novice may have gone, hut the deep-seated enthusiasm of the genuine collector remains to make days full of the rare delight that attends the pursuit or follows the acquisition of an increase to his folios or to his information.

When the large size of Lord Cheylesmore's collection is taken intu comsideration it will be seen that it was impossible in the pages of The Connolsseur to make the illustrations from it even fairly representative. Tor ask the owner to make his own selection was to bring to light an almost parental solicitule.
"How can I tell sou my twelse favourite prints? They are all $m y$ favourites," was the exclamation :hich had a plaintive note in it, such as Niobe's night have had if asket for which of her children she wept. Yet, happily, it led to a discursive survey of the walls that has directly or indirectly helped the photographer.
"There are so many points of interest, there are so many different aspects under which to consider them. Look, for instance, at this 'Shipwreck' (see page 6) by Charles Turner, after his great namesake : how well the engraver has translated the artist, what movement it has, and light! It was the first oil picture of Turner's that was ever engraved-1805, I think, was the date; the picture was painted for Sir John Leicester. That must be one of my favourites, surely; I like looking at that always. Now, here is my 'Miranda.' I bought it from Mr. Horne for $£ 40$. A dealer has just sent me one to compare with it ; he asks $£ 650$ for it, but it is not as goorl as mine; eh! what do you think?"

Is there a collector in the world who can fail to sympathise with that little subtle smile of satisfaction in realising over again the pleasure of the bargain, a pleasure not minimised by the fact that Mr. Henry l'ercy Horne is one of the keenest connoisseurs in London, and that this was about the only orcasion on which he was known to have tripperl? " Mine is the more brilliant, I am almost sure, and the state is the same. Give me your opinion." Lorl

Cheylesmore rarely asserts, he suggests; and he waits for a comparatively valueless opinion with apparent deference. There was no doubt about the superiority of the proof on the wall, so the smile was still there as we lingered past a "Duchess of Devonshire," a " Countess of Carrick," a rare "Lady Sligo," a unique " Mrs. Sheridan " (scc page 3), " Lady Carwardine and Child," "Mrs. Robinson," "Mrs. Jorilan," and "Mrs. Payne Galwey," to a corner where "A London Sweeper" (sce pagc 8) struck a strange note of contrast. It is a remarkable study, strong, pregnant, and vivid.
"Have you ever seen that? Do you know it is the only one I have ever met? I do not know who pained it, and I do not know who engraved it. This is an engraver's proof, without any lettering. It looks to me like Charles Turner. What do you

I have alluded to Horace Walpole. Coming away from Princes Gate, leaving Lord Cheylesmore in his print room, surrounded by the very cream and frasrance of that brilliant London society in which that delicate dilethate de lighted, shut out from all the ugly I ondon fors, all the chamour of the news. boys with the la'ent horrors from the seat of war, all the sordid dismal present, it scemed to me I had left behind me the molern prototype of the Manter of Strawherry, with. out his eynicism, without the foppish mamerisms that be longed to a past ade, but with the traditions of his hospitality, and the fine literary flatour of his reminiseences. Horatio built himself his little (iothic caste cotlage on the banks of the Thames ; lord (heyAnmore has his laren amil lemates on the Gutskirts of Ifyde l'ark; but boih alike admit therr friculs and their acquantamese, and vouble the pleasure of possession by adding to them the praises of the appreciative. A personally conducted tour round the walls of Prince's Gate is as a panorama of the eighteenth century unfolded to the enrapt spectator by a guide whose familiarity with the scenery makes vivid each landmark.

THE I.IBRARY OF ( OROLIER 13 II. 亡. FIETCHER, F.S.A.

The famous library which the great scholar and bibliophile, Jean Grolier, Vicomte dAguisy, formed in his residence, the Hôtel de Lyon, near the Buci Gate at Paris, was not only remarkable for its size, considering the time in which it was collected, but it was also notable for the beauty of the books it contained, and the exquisite bindings with which they were clothed. Grolier, who was born at L.yons in 1479, in the year 1510 succeeded his father, Etienne Grolier, in the office of Treasurer of the Duchy of Milan, and during the period he resided in Italy he availed himself of his many opportunities of acquiring choice and rare books. While living in that country he made the acquaintance of Aldus Manutius, the "scholar printer" of Venice, and both Aldus and his successors were greatly assisted by him in producing the numerous volumes which issued from their press. They were not ungrateful for the pecuniary aid and encouragement which he gave them. Several of the works were dedicated to him, and special copies of all the books they printed were reserved for his library, which were also most probably bound for him in their workshops.

Groliers library consisted of about three thousand volumes, of which some three hundred and fiftyfive are now known to exist. Of these, as might be expected, the Bibliothèque Nationale of France contains the largest number-sixty-four ; about thirty are in the British Museum, principally in the library bequeathed by the Rer. C. M. Cracherode; fifteen in the Bibliotheque St. Geneviève; six in the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal; seven or eight in the library of Trinity College, Dublin; and several in the library of Eton College. Many others are also to be found in the private libraries of this and other countries, no fewer than twenty-four being in the fine library of the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth, while others are preserved in the collections of Lord Amherst, Captain Holford and Mr. Huth. Eleven were in the Sunderland library, sold in the years 1881, 1882 and 1883 ; ten in the Beckford library, which was dispersed in 1882 and 1883 ; and three in the collection of Mr. K. S. Turner, disposed of in three portions in 1878 and 1888 .

Grolier's books principally owe their charm and their value to the beautiful bindings with which they are adorned. It has been well said of them that "it would seem as if the Muses who had contributed to the composition of the contents had also applied themselves to the decoration of the outsides of the books, so much of art and esprit appears in their ornamentation." The generous and well-known motto, " 10 . Grolieril et amicorvm," which, with few exceptions, is found stamped upon the bindings, or written, with some slight variations, inside the volumes, adds greatly to the interest of the books.

That this was no unmeaning assertion，and that Grolier really intended his library for the use and enjoyment of his friends as well as himself，is shown by the number of duplicate copies which the library contained．In some instances as many as four，or even five，copies of a favourite work were to be found in it．Other collectors of the time used a similar legend，notably Tommaso Maioli，Marc Lauwrin，the celebrated Italian and Flemish biblio－ philes，and our own countryman，Thomas Wotton， the father of Sir Henry Wotton and three other distinguished sons．A sentiment of the same kind was also expressed by the great collector，Richard

Heber，whose immense library was disposed of in a number of sales extending over the years $1834-37$ ． On being asked why he often purchased several copies of the same book，he replied，＂Why，you see，sir，no man can comfortably do without three copies of a book．One he must have for his show copy，and he will probably keep it at his country house．Another he will require for his own use and reference；and unless he is inclined to part with this，which is very inconvenjent，or risk the injury of his best copy，he must needs have a third at the service of his friends．＂ upon the upper cover of his books, the legend "portio mea domine sit in terra viventivm," adapted from the fifth verse of the one hundred and forty-second I'saim, which runs in the Vulgate Clamavi ad te Domine, dixi: $T u$ es spes mea, rtio mea in terra viventium," generally occurs on e lower. Several other legends: "tanqvam vivs est vita mea," from the seventh verse of e seventh chapter of Job; "cvstodit dominvs c nes diligentes se, et omnes impios disperdet," 1 se twenty of the hundred and forty-fifth Psalm; a. I "Qvisqve svos patimvr manes," a part of the s. en hundred and forty-third line of the sixth book of the Eneid, were occasionally used by Grolier. Sometimes his arms-az., three bezants or in point, with three stars arg. in chief-are stamped upon the covers of his books, and they are also emblazoned with those of his wife, Anne Briçonnet, in a dedicatory copy of De Harmonia Musicorum Instromentorum, by Franchino Gaforia, now preserved in the Bibliothèque de I' Arsenal. On a few of his volumes occurs the device of a hand entwined with a scroll learing the words "eqve difficvlter" coming out of a cloud, and striving to pull an iron bar from the ground on the top of the highest of a group of mountains, probably the Alps. This is found only on his earlier bindings, and is believel to refer to some special event of his life. A very fine binding on a copy of Divina Propertione, by Luca Paccioli, printed at Venice in 1509 , with this device on the lower cover, and Grolier's arms on the upper, was shown by Lord Amherst at the Exhibition of Bookbindings at the Burlington Fine Arts Club in 189 r.

Grolier's books are generally bound in morocco, most frequently of reddish brown, citron, or olive-green colours, hut we also often find them covered with brown calf, gilt and painted, marbled, or mottled with black. Their decoration principal!y consists of a geometrical pattern combined with arabesques, either solid, azured, or in outline only, tooled in gold ; the ornamentation being occasionally col. oured. Sometimes the geometrical de sign occurs without the arabesque work, or the arabesque work without the geometrical design. In a few very rare instances the entire side, with the exception of the ornamental panels, is covered with exceedingly graceful scroll work. A very finc specimen of this style of decoration occurs on the binding of a copy of Vico's Commentaria in Vetcra Imperatorum Romanorum Numismata, published at Venice in ${ }_{1560}$, preserved in the British Museum ; and another example is to be found in the bibliotheque Nationale, which is reproduced in M. Henri Bouchot's "Fac-similes of Bindings" in that library. It is not always easy to determine which of Grolier's bindings were executed in Italy, and which in France. Those on the books presented to him while in Italy by Aldus and his successors were, as we have said. in all probability executed in their workshops, of under their immediate superintendence; and they are, as Mr. Horne remarks in his excellent work, The Binding of Books, the first gilt bindings which are known to have been specially done for an individual person. The books which Grolier adder to his library after his return to France are thought to have been hound by the Italian craftsmen he is said to hive taken with him when he returned to his native land, but as the bindings of his later Aldine books are frequently ornamented with the same stamps as those used on the earlier ones, it is probable that bound copies of these books were sent to him direct from the printers.

After Grolier's death in r565, his books were divided among his heirs: the greater number. partly by heritage, and partly by acqui sition, becoming the property of Méry de Vic, Keeper of the Scals under Louis XIII. They remained in possession of his family until 1675, when they were sold by public auction.
Grolier did not confine his attention to the acquisition of books, but also accumulated a large number of coins, medals, and various antiquities, which, after his decease, were carried as far as Marseilles on their way to Rome for the purpose of being sold there, when they were stopped by Charles IX., who purchased them for the Royal collection at Fontainebleau. They were unfortunately pillaged and dispersed in 1576 during the civil war which raged in France at that time.

He acted as the ambassador of Francis I. to Pope Clement VII., and in 1547 he obtained the appointmont of Treasurer-General of France, a post he held until his death. He was a great patron of scholars and promoter of learning, and was distinguished for his integrity, his princely munificence and his modesty. Erasmus, who knew him well, describes him as a man possessing all good qualities and all the virtues in a well-formed and vigorous body; and De Thou speaks of him as "a man of equal elegance of manners, and spotlessness of character." He adds, "His books seemed to be the counterpart of himself for neatness and splendour."

Although volumes from the library of Grolier are so greatly sought after and valued at the present time, as late as the commencement of the nineteenth century the prices obtained for them were very small. In Antoine Augustin Renouard's Catalogue de la Bibiothéque d' un Amateur, printed at Paris in 1819 , a letter to the author is to be found from James Edwards, the well-known London bookseller and collector, who writes :--"M. Renouard,-If any of the beautiful volumes of Aldus, in octavo, with Grolier bindings, should fall into your hands, I beg you to reserve them for me; I will give you a louis for each of them." Renouard replied :-"M. Ed-wards,-If any of the beautiful volumes of Aldus, in octavo, with Grolier bindings, should fall into your hands, I beg you to reserve them for me; I will give you six guineas for each of them." In the Beckford sale two volumes bound for Grolier -Philostrati Vita Apollonii Tianci, printed by Aldus at Venice in 1502 , with a binding of red morocco; and a copy of Lucants, printed by Aldus in 1515 , bound in marbled calf, realised respectively three hundred pounds, and two hundred and ninety pounds; and in the Turner sale at Paris a Grolier binding fetched three thousand francs. At the Téchener sale in 1888, the high price of twelve thousand francs was obtained for a very fine one on a copy of the History of Ethiopia, by Helionlorus, printed at Basel in 1552. The same book in an ordinary binding would not sell for more than five shillings.
M. Le Roux de Lindy, in his work Recherches sur Jan Grolier, published at Paris in 1866, gives lists of the books still existing which were in Grolier's library, and of the collections in which they are to be found.

PART 1.

A modern writer, whose words have lingered longer in my memory than his name, has said that if the citizen of any European country outside l'rance were asked to name the two countries that have done most for literature, art and science, he would put his own native land first, for the sake of patriotism, and lrance second. Since everytoody yields France the best place after his own country, continues the writer, it is not difficult to see that france is really in the van of European progress. Hc adds that our near neighbour has beld the honoured place for many generations.

This opinion, with which it would be hard to quatrel, is recalled to mind by a consideration of the life of the great Spaniard, Francisco José de Cioya y I.ucientes, known to the work at large as Goya. lirance made him possible, gave her wonderful new ideas to mourish him, stimulated his work, whether it was with brush, jeneil, or necelle, offered him encouragement and an asylum while he lived, and formed a band of disciples to follow and cen develop his theories of work when he was dead.

[^0]Goya was the last great painter of Spain; since his day Fortuny has been the only notable representative of Spanish art ; the most modern school has neither masters nor masterpieces. In France, on the other hand, Goya inspired Delarroix, Henri Regnault, and Manet, and has a distinct influence upon the greatest of the living French impressionists. After many years the interest in his work has reached our shores, and some of his pictures were seen at the Spring Exhibition of Spanish paintings held at the : Guildhall, though the work shown there was not his best. Goya came immediately after Velasque\% in the public interest at that Fxhibition, and to-day dutails of his life and the distribution of his works are mattors of considerable interest. Perhaps the improving political relations betwen Great Britain and Spain have given an added importance to Spanish art, but among the causes of the special interest in (ioga may be placed the painter's acknowledged position as the historian of his times. "Before lons," wrote Theophile Gautice more than half a century ago, " Goya's caricatures will be looked upen in the light of historical monuments." The ereat writer was justified in his prophecy: to-day we can turn to the picturcs, etchings, and lithographs of foya for comprehensive comment upon some of the most exciting times and interesting perple Europe has seen in its years of comparative civilization. Artists, who are less concerned with politics, gor to Goya's work to note the breaking away from the old traditions that not only marle the artist the greatest man of his generation, but cleared the way for future painters.

Information about the painter's life and work is not readily found. Mr. William Rothenstein has published a short, but interesting, study under the auspices of the Unicom Press.* I have seen nothing else that is important in Einglish. In France, where Goya's place has been acknowledged so long, Charles Yriarte published a delightful book in 1867 rlealing with the artist's life and work, and dedicated

[^2]to the Acarlemy of San Fernando at Madricl. Pau' Lefort has left us another work upon the same sub)ject ("Francisco Goya, Eturle biographique et critique," Paris, Libraire Renouard), followed by the "Essai d’un catalogue raisonné de l'œuvre gravé et lithographié de Francisco Goya," which is a compilation of great value. Theophile Gautier had an intense admiration for the Spanish painter's manysided genius, and wrote about him as he alone could write,* and there have been some noteworthy articles in the French press showing the influence of Goya's work upon modern art. In Spanish we have the well-known book "Goya noticias biograficas," by Don 1:. Zapater y Gomez (Zaragoza, 1868), containing interesting extracts from the correspondence carried on between Goya and his friend, Don Martin Zapater, between the sears 1775 and 1801 . From a study of these volumes I have endeavoured to construct a picture of Goya's time from Goya's work, and by the help of frients in Marlid and Seville I am able to give photographs of some of Goyas prortraits that are in private $S_{\text {panish }}$ collections, and a list that, while neressarily incomplete, and even berhaps inaccurate, goes one step further twwards the publication of a complete catalogue of his porraits. The artist worked in troubled times; many $f$ his pictures were put away for safety, and forthe, some were lost. His work as a painter was 1 knuwn to Napuleon's generals, or ignored ly them, fir the Louvre has but one portrait by Goya, that of $A_{i}$ ins. Guillemardet, French Ambassarlor to Marril. li ny of the portraits have changed hands more than once in recent years, and these changes, effected quite privately, are hard to trace. It is clear that the rare worth of Goyas work has made his canvases as great a prize as the Bordeaux lithographs or those early etchings of the Caprichos printed before the aquatint had worn off the copper. With the works on copper and stone, and with the miniatures on ivory, I do not propose to deal: the limits of the space at my disposal forbid. Moreover, etchings, lithographs, and miniatures are well known to collectors: they have been criticised, appraiserl, ratalogued, and, in short, suffered all the penalties of their rarity.

For the better and closer study and more complete comptehension of the work discussel, it is necessary to look round at the Europe of the artist's time, for Goya was a direct product of the revolutionary forces at work on the Continent, and he expressed them to the fullest extent of his powers in the midst of one of the most conservative Courts in Christendom, never hesitating to paint the portraits of remarkable men, thoush their names were an abomination to his pattons.

Here is the first record of the painter's life:-
" March $31: 5$, $17+6$. I, the viear of linendetodos have taptised a baby horn gesteralay, legtimate olfopring of Jose hoya and Gracia laciones kegally maribed, living in this jarinh and natives of Saragoses. ]le is named francisen Gona, his godmother leing liancisa the (imzo. I have pointed out wher that upen the spiritual parent devolves the duty of teaching lae child the dactrine of Christianity, should the parents neglet to do so. I have drawn up the certificate and sigued it on the same day of the same month of the same year.

What would the worthy priest have said or done could he have foreseen that the baby was destined to deal such deadly blows to clericaliom and the Inquisition?

History begins to deal with Goya when he was very young. At twelve, or soon after, he was working with his brush. He soon found his way to the studio of Jose Martinc\% I usan, a painter of Saragossa, who had been in Italy and studied Tiepolo's work, and before he reached years of dis. cretion he was in serious trouble with the local authorities. Years of discretion is hardly a proper term applied to Goya, for he never reached them; suffice it that while yet in his teens he was drawn into the street rivalries of the religious brotherhoorls, and worked such execution on behalf of the supporters of La Señora del Pilar-whose church he was destined to decorate in later years-that the Inquisition set its officers upon him, and at the suggestion and by the help of his parents he fled to Madrid, where the painter Antony Raphael Mengs was in power* At this time Charles III., the strongest and best of the Spanish Bourbons, was on the throne of Spain, busily forcing his backward subjects to become reformed, whether they cared for the process or resented it. He had seen the beginning of a change in the condition of Europe before he movel from Naples to Madrid; he was prepared to take progress by the hand, never dreaming that its developments were leading up to the French Revolution. Astrong, straight-dealing man, with a taste for open air life and clean living, he was sup. ported by ministers like Aranda and Florida Blanca, who shared his admiration for progress and his ignorance of its logical outcome. In the stimulating at. mosphere of the capital - where the streets had been lighted at nightail for the first time in their history, and the melodramatic costume of the Madrileños had been im. proved by royal edict -Goya lived a free, dissipated life, doing little or no recorded work, but studying the times and the new ideas they brought in their train, therely establishing his future interest in social progress. He was reckoned a clever painter, enjoyed the patronage of Count Florida Blanca, and the worship of his youthful mrades, for he played the guitar exceptionally well, ,uld sing and dance with the best, had great hysical strength, and if his tongue was sharp, his sword was sharper. Life in Madrid was full of ntrigues and brawls; law and order were often at a discount. Goya was young, daring, impressionable, and fascinating, and naturally enough he made enemies. Left for dead in a Madrid byeway, with a mazaja between his shoulders, he recovered in time to offend the Inquisition once again, and as lilurida Blanca could not or would net holp him, he left the capital, where Char!es III. was drassing an unwilling prople at the heels of reform, and entered the cuadrilla of :a bull fighter. In this company he made his way to Rome, studying the details of a bull lighter's life, which he was to depict with such rare force in the thirty-three etchings that compose the "Tauromachia" serics and the four lithographs done in Bordeaux more than half a contury later. In a letter written on his journey the artist signs himself " Franciseo de los Toros." Hiad he retained the favour of the authorities, his journcy to Rome would have teen an easier one, and he would have been entited to a small grant made to Spanish artists who studied in Italy. For the sake of his etchings and lithographs it is well that he was compelled to work his way.

He arrived in Rome penniless and threadbare, but then, as now, the Eternal City held many Spanish painters within her gates, and the new recruit was well received, though he did not seek or accept much help. He sludied the great pictures, but copied none of them, established a studio, and worked hard. The Acatemy of Parma awarderl him the second prize in an open competition for a picture of Hamibal looking down upon Italy from the Alps, and this success must have been valuable to him at the time when it was achieved. "I have had three masters," 'he writes in a letter sent at a much later date to a friend, "Nature, Velasquez, and Rembranlt." It is clear, then, that the influence of Rume upon Goya was neither great nor abiding, but he gradually aturacted the foreign visitors of high degree to his studio, obtaining through some of them an meroduction to the Pope (Bencdict XIV.), whose portrait by Goya, painted in a few hours, hangs in the Vatican today. He kept in touch with political and social develop. ments all over Europe, getting the hest news from his sitters, and as an instance of the high regard in which he was held, all offer from the Russian Court to take an official position there may le recorded. In Rome Goya met Bayeu, the Spanish Court painter, whose daughter Josefa became his wife and mother of twenty children, nearly all of whom dicd young. He also met the painter lavid, another revolutionary spirit, with whom he carried un a prolonged correspon. dence. When he was rapidly making a position for himself, another ugly scandal came to light. With supreme contempt for his enemies the priests. Goya, whose irregular life was notorious throughout Rome, as it had been in Madricl, tried to carry off a young girl from a concent.* The [^4]Spanish ambassadors efforts and Goya's promise to leare Italy at once barely sufficed to save the situation.

On his return to Madrid Goya painted the " Entierro de la Sartina," here reproduced (page 23), which hangs with four small companion pictures on the walls of the San Fernando Gallery. These works are most delicately rembered, in a manner to which the painter seldom returnerl, and preserve their attractiveness to this day, despite the bizarre nature of the subjects. They are full of vivacity and movement, and their colour scheme is most effective. The other four of the series are "A Bull Fight," "The Flagellants," " Meeting of the Court of Inquisition," and "The Interior of a Mad House." Even the street brawls, so dear to him, were of value (o) the painter's work: his sense of movement is wonderful. So great was the attention accorded to these pictures that Raphael Mengs gave the artist a commission for a series of designs for the tapestry factory of Santa Barbara, which was under Royal patronage. The King was entirely satisfied with the work, which may be seen in the Museo del Pradu to-day; and in 1780 Goya was elected to membership of the San Fernando Academy. It is worthy of note that the rising favourite had already shown his independence, and would attack Churchmen at one moment, though he decorated the Church at another. He had realized that his position was secured by the time he had painted the portrait of old King Charles in hunting costume, the Christ on the Cross (in the Prado Gallery), and had commenced his Velasquez etchings.* His "St. Francis on the Mountain," painted about this time, pleased f. Charles III. immensely. "Their Majesties are mad about your Goya," the painter writes to a friend in a letter recalling the success of this work.

Now the time had come when the little boy who had fought the village battles of La Señora del Pilar was to design the decorations for the church of that name in Saragossa. His designs were not approved, and as his father-in-law was in part responsible for their rejection, Coya refused to alter them, until his old friend and earliest counsellor, the monk Felix Salvador, persuaded him to give way. Then he made slight alterations. Perhaps Josefa had complained to her father, Señor Bayeu, about Goya's neglect; he was never a faithful husband, though always a loving one. This suggestion has been put forward to account for the exception taken by Bayeu to Goya's work, and is the more reasonable because the young painter's gifts were recognised on every side by men who could not accept his theories. Few painters have impressed themselves more strongly upon a generation whose conventions they were destroying.

I Don Louis de Bourbon, brother of old King Charles, and later years father-in-law of Manuel Gorloy; Prince of the Peace, was Goya's great friend and patron in these years. Goya lived for some time in his house and painted many of his family. The portraits passed into the hands of the family of the P'rince's wife, Maria Teresa, of Vallabriga, Countess de Chinchon, and to the gallery of their palace of Boadilla del Monte. The portraits of Prince Lonis and his wife bear interesting notes. On the Prince's portrait one reads: "Painted by Goya hetween nine oclock and midday, ith September, ${ }_{17} 83$." The note on the Princess's portrait runs: "Painted between eleven o'clock and mid-day on the 27 th August, 1783 ." The other portraits of the same collection include the family of the Prince, one of the Countess of Chinchon and Prince Louis, and portraits of the Cardinal Louis de Bourbon, (iencral Ricardos, and Admiral Mazarredo, the strongest admiral in the service of Charles IV. lown to ${ }_{17} 89$, when Charles III. passed from the scene, with the edhoes of the French Revolution ringing through his ears, at a time when his country needed him most, (Goya made steady progress in popularity and artistic development. Though he had not amended the manner of his life, he lived in comparative tranquillity, restrained to some extent, however small, by the strong influence of the King, who kept a sober Court and believed that genius was not incompatible with respectability. With the death of Charles III, we find a new era dawning upon Spain, an eria for whose social developments (ioya was at least better prepared than most of the people of the Court. His position as an artist was assured. The leaders of society had long preferred his work to that of the Court painters, and though a man whose style changed with his mood can hardly be said to have established a school, he had at least broken away from the fetters of the classical convention, with its commonplace handling applied on every subject alike, its limited scope of treatment, and impossible lackgrounds. During the last years of the old King's life Goya had painted many portraits of undistinguished people of noble family, and the student of Goya the portrait painter finds his greatest difficulty in tracing these portraits.

While the populace of Madrid lnved Goya for the laring unconventionality of his life, his contempt for the I:quisition, and the scandal of his tove affairs, to many of the better-class Madrileños who came to his studio he was no more and no less than the popular matador of the hour, whom they admired and with whom they intrigued or aspired to intrigue. Goya was, in brief, a fashion, a craze, at this period of his life ; that he did not pass away is due to the stable mind that was associated with a giant's physique. The artist, whose mode of life was as unconventional as his works, was a close student of the books that had made the French Revolution: in his most riotous days he mastered the Contrat Social, which his friend, Gaspar Melchior de Jovellanos, harl translated. He painterl the portrait of the great literary minister who was treated so ill by Manuel Gorloy, and the canvas is in the prossession of Señor Botija, who exhibited it in Marlrill not long ago.

A record of the artist at work in his stullo seems to give a fair impression of the man. He would stand silently at his easel, a few friends seated behind him, also preserving complete silence. At considerable distance from the canvas the model would be placed; woe to him if he moved. Goya, fired by inspiration, would work savagely, in a condition approaching frenzy. His rapidity was only equalled hy his gift for seizing what was essential in the subject, expressing it in the fewest possible strokes, and

los mRUJAS
letting the rest go. "A picture that gives a true effect is finished," he would say,* and he seldom cared to elaborate his work. Some few pictures, as well as his early drawings, show us that elaboration was rather beyond his inclination than his power.

[^6]Such a one is "La Romeria de San Isidro," of which he wrote to Zapater that it had given him more trouble than he would take again. He did not always use a brush, but would take his colours from the bowls in which they were kept, and put big patches of pigment on the canvas with the first thing that came to hand-a piece of rag, a sponge, a spoon -and then work the material with his thumb. A cloud, which a few simple touches sufficed to suggest, supplied his backgrounds and expressed his absolute independence of the schools he had outlived.
"There is no such thing as colour in Nature," he remarked to a friend on one occasion; "there are only light and shade. Give me charcoal, and I will paint your portrait." If this seems an extravagant statement for his times, it must be remembered that charcoal in Goya's hands had almost unlimited possibilities for suggestion.* If he failed at all it was in his ecclesiastical work, and there, as has been well said, he failed because his highest type of woman was a mondaine. He could not see spiritual beauty in anything, though he could be as dainty in his treatment of Andalusian and Castilian girlhood as any painter before or after him. "La Aldeana," the picture from the collection of the Marquis of Casa Torres produced here (page 25) is proof of this; and if other proofs were needed one can turn to the Watteau-like" Dance on the Banks of Mazanares," or the charming picture called "The Swing," painted for the Countess of Benavente, and for many years in the gallery of the Duke of Ossuna.

The death of Charles III. paved the way for the expression of Goya's highest genius. In France Louis XVI. was in the hands of the people and in danger of his life; in Spain the ministry was most anxious to help the unfortunate King, and was at the same time face to face with grave internal and external troubles, for the wars with England had damaged Spain severely on the sea, taxes were high, food was scarce, and ministers, seeing how the liberty of the people led to serious trouble, lost their heads, and tried to revert to the condition that had prevailed before Cbarles III. reigned. Charles IV. was a well-meaning, brainless king, with forty wasted years behind him when he ascended the throne; his wife, Maria Luisa of Parma, to whom he hall heen married for some years, was notorious for her irregular life, though her husband seemed to be unaware of it, and ignored the scantal of her association with Mamuel Gorloy. One portrait of this Queen is given here (on page 31) -the great equestrian portrait from the I'rado Gallery, which shows her in uniform of the Guards, wearing a Bolivar hat similar to the one which Goya wears in the picture that accompanies one of the crllections of his Caprice etchings. It is a superl, piece of portrature, and when Goya acknowledged his indebtedness to Velasque\%, he must have had this canvas and its companion picture, King Charles on horseback, in his mind. A less ambitious portrait of Maria I.uisn, but one that is perhaps a better index to her character, is in the collection of Senor Beruete, and is reproduced on this page. European anarchy and an unbridled Court suited Goya's genius to a nicety. "He has a quick and profound sense of the ignoble," says Theophile Ginutier, in writing of Goya's art, and really the criticism is well deserved; for while we find the artist handling all the follies of his time without mercy, giving full rein to the satirist within him, holding up to undying scorn the priests, the titlert courtesans, the sycophants, the complaisant mothers, the savage soldiers, ant the rest of the people who troubled his heloved country, it is only fair to remark that he did not seek to improve his own life in any way. He represents a type of the Arragonese Spaniard, quick to anger and of scant mercy,

THE PICAUOR AND THE BULL

intolerant of persecution and ignorance, but an anarchist in doctrine, an atheist by convictions, and a libertine by temperament, admirable only because under all circumstances, however trying, he is every inch a man.

Goya, Court painter to Charles IV., is Goya at his best. He helped the gay social life of Madric, and was so fond of brawls that he had his special apothecary, upon whom he would descend at all hours of the night to repair any damage that might have been inflicted. He was the lover of the Countess Benavente, one of the greatest ladies of Maria L.uisa's Court, and spent a long time at her palace of the Alameda, beyond Madrid, painting the pictures that afterwards adorned the gallery of the Duke of Ossuna. They include the Duke's family, the I uke, the General Urrutia perhaps one of the best of Goya's portraits - and the Countess Benavente herself. A nother portrait of the Countess is in the collec. tion of senor Bauer.

In the carly days of the new king's ruign, Goya experienced the one genuine passion of his life, the passion $t$, which we owe some of the most delightful work that ever came from his hand. He fell in love with the young and beautiful Duchess of Alla, and while with her seemed at times to forget the "sense of the ignoble" that makes so much of his work revolting. He forsook the Countess Benavente as he had forsaken so many women before her, though he appears to have remained salaried painter to the great family to which she belonged. The Countess complained to Maria Straightway (iopa applied to the King for lave of absence, on the ground of ith-halth, and with money supplied by the family of the bemavente, started off to the country with the buchens. He kept an illustrated diary of the journey, giving many details of the events on the read, a diary that passed into the hands of Jon Valintine Cardreras, whose death in the early eiglties deprived Spain of one of her soundes judges of art. For the Juchess, if not at har distinct instigation, Cora executed two Caprices. in which the Benavente family were severely handed. These are extremely rate, and were not known to all the painter's friends. One curious appert of the painters limisen with the buchess is that mether was baithful to the other. Noterthekess, he lowed bear an well as he could love anybody-it may the remarked that he always lowed his own wife-and did some of his most delightful works under ber inspiration. The Duchess had the gitt of giving stimulus to all his moods, and he lingered with lier in exile for more than a year, before he had to return to the Court or lose his position there. Maria luisi, who was not altosether unkind-she has been accused. indeed, of being too kind to Goya-pardoned and recalled the Duchess, who ame back to Miartrid, w die some months later in the fulnen of her beames and the carty summer of her life.

Goya painted her many times: I bethere there are ter portraits in evistence. The collection of the. Marguis of Romana comatas as striking picture of Goy:a and the Duchess. The buke of Alla has an even better pieture of the Duchess in his pratace a Madrid, Don Rafact Barrio hats a portait, the

There are other pictures in which her features are given without her name: She is in the Church of San Antonio of Phorida and the Musco of Valcncia; her fiatures attract us in the pictures of the manolas on the hakeony; and stie is the maja of the pietures in the San lermando Gallery. We see her many times, hut not too often, for she is always fascinating, and might have inspired a Regnolds or a Gainshorough as she impired doya.

Down to the date of the journey to San Lucar, the painter's life had been one long triumply ower his comemies and his art. He had mowed forward stadily, from ohecurity to fanc, from poserty to affluence, and though his lincs were cast in corrugt places, one linds no record of any sactifice made. to his artistic convictions for the sake of his supporters. On the road to San lucar he lost his hearing through a cold, caught while mending a whed of a coach in which the buchess was riding, and though he worked checrfully enough in his months of exile, the difficultion on the return to Court, when his deafness was complete, must have been very great. Following the loucters of Aha's wath came a condition of lifful metimcholy that grew stadily until the artist appeared to lose interest in all that was beautiful in bife. Outside circumstances had much to do with his depremion, as 1 hope to show hater on, hut it started with the showk to his health on the journey to the Duches of Alta's comintry house, and became incurable after her death. In Fchruary, 1758 , a Mr. Boothby sat to sir Joshua Reynolds. The picture has beth among the unknown until recently, when it was discovered, with an inscription on the back: "Chartes Boothty Skrymshire, Esç., of Tooly lark, I.eicester, aded is, $175^{\circ}$ ' (see perse' +1 ). This portrait, when sold, wals described as having treen in Kensington Pahace; it is now the property of Framgis Klcinberger, of laris. Apart from the fact that it is a very fine specimen of Sir Josheua's early work, it has an additional interest from the fact that it represents the same man as the line halfekength portrait painted ncar!\} thirty years after, now at letworth, and up to now only known as "Prince Boothby" (sec pase 30).

This picture, together with a companion portrait of a lady in white (see pare 38 ), were purchased carly in the bast century by the Earl of Egremont, but nothing further was known about them. The lady was cohibited in 1817 and 1871 as an unknown portrait. A reference to Sir Joshua's ledgern disclosed a payment in 1775 from Mr. Boothby of $£ 73$ ros., and a sitting given by him in 1784 , and also a payment in 1785 from Mr. Boothby, of 8 , Clarges Street, of $£ 105$, for a portrait of a lady.

The first point to settle was who was Irince Boothby? No such name was to be found in any pedigree of the family, but, after a long search, I found in a number of the Gentlcman's Magazine for 1800 an account of the suicide of Charles Skrymshire Boothby Clopton, in Clarges Street, Piccadilly, from which it appeared that he was the son of Thomas Boothby and Anne, daughter of Sir Hugh Clopton; that on succeeding to an estate he added the name of Skrymshire, and later, on the death of Mrs. Clopton l'arthericke (who was buried in Stratford-on-Avon Church in 1792), he inherited Clopton, and assumed that name in lieu of that of Skrymshire. The notice also stated that he was given the nickname of "Prince Buothly" by his friends in consequence of his eccentricity in dress and his fondness of associating with people of rank.

The next point to settle was who was the lady of the portrait, who remained unknown at the time of the publication of the first three volumes of the "History of Sir Joshua Reynolds's Works."

In October, 1900, I received a letter from Mr. Clarence Eiloart, stating that he had a portrait by Sir Joshua of Mr. Buothby, who was, according to a tradition in his famiiy, engaged to a Miss Darby. When I saw this picture I found it to be a very beautiful small copy of the Petworth portrait. Mr. Eiloart afterwards discovered the will of Charles Boothby Clopton, of Clarges Street, dated July 21 ist, 1797, with a codicil dated November 28th, 1;99. In this will he leaves most of his property to his sister Gertrude and to his " amiable and respectable friend, Miss Elizabeth Darby," and to the latter he leaves, among other things, " my three half-length pictures by Sir Joshua Revnolds and all paintings and drawings of every description done by her."

Mr. Eiloart, who is related to Miss Darby, also discovered in The Times of September 27 th , 1800 , an advertisement by James Denew, auctioneer, of $3^{\circ}$, Charles Street, Berkeley Square, of the sale of "the late Mr. Skrymshire's effects." It is probable that it was at this sale that the Earl of Egremont purchased the pictures.

Miss Darby died in 1838, and was buried in St. George's Chapel, Uxbridge Road. It seems to me most probable that the Petworth lady, acknowledged for over a century as one of the finest of Sir Joshua's portraits, represents Miss Darby, and that she solld the original pictures as being too large for a small house, retaining her own copy of her friend's portrait until her death, when it passed to the family of her nephew. The illustrations given herewith are the newly-discovered early portrait and the two Petworth pictures; the two latter being reproduced by the kind permission of Lord Leconfield.

It may be interesting to add that Clopton was sold by Boothby Skrymshire Clopton's imistees to Fisher Jones, who sold it in 1826 to Mr. Loyd, from whom it passed to his nephew, Mr. Ward, by whose executor, Sir John B. Lawes, it was sold in 1873 to Sir Arthur Horlgson, K.C.M.G., the present owner.

The article that 1 wrote for the October number of Tine Connorsseur brought at once information from Mr. T. H. Woods, of Christie's, that he had sold the picture of Miss Ward and her $\log$ to Mr. Asher Wertheimer, from whom it passed to Baron Nathaniel de Rothschild, of Vienna, the present owner. Further research has disclosed the following interesting facts about this beautiful picture, of which an illustration is given on the next page by permission

MISS WARD AND HER DOG
BY SIR JOSHUA
REYNOLDS
of Mr. Woorls. Miss Anna Maria Ward was the rlaughter of John, second Viscount Dudley and Ward. She married in 1803 Horace David Cholwell St. Paul, Count of the Holy Roman Empire, who was born on January 6th, 1775, created a baronet on November 17 th, $181_{3}$, and died in 1840 . She died January 26th, 1837 , aged 58 , leaving an only son, Sir Horace St. Paul, of Ewart Park, Northumberland, and five daughters. The picture, which remained in Lady St. Paul's family until the death of her son on May 2gth, 189!, was then sold by the executors. Miss Ward was, it will be seen, eight years of age when she was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds.

THOMAS ROMIANISON BY RAIPH NEVILI.

Born in 1756 , at a period when the people of England delighted in a rough, full-blooded gaiety, strangely antipathetic to their descendants of to-day, Thomas kowlandson found the epoch exactly suited to his tastes, genius, and disposition.

Like (and perhaps even more than) Debucourt and l'ragonard, his delight was to regard life from a frivolous and pleasure-loving point of view. Of a lifferent nature from his great predecessor, Hogarth, he never sought to teach a lesson or to castigate a vice. With him indifference took the place of severity, and laughter that of regretful tears. Numerous as are his works, there is scarcely one which touches even the border line of pathos, though had he care 1 to devote his genius to more serious efforts, there are good grounds for believing that there, too, he would have triumphed as he did in that particular line to which both inclination and surroundings impelled him. A lover of laughter and facile pleasure, his pencil (or, rather, his reed pen) ever showed itself indulgent towards the young, the frivolous, and the fair, finding, however, nothing but scorn and contempt for the austere and ugly.

Jovial, careless, and extravagant, a good friend, though fickle lover, his was a mind which recked but little of the responsibilities or duties of life as the world understands them; well content with laughter alone, though not entirely devoid of that consciousness of the tragedy of human existence which must of necessity occasionally obtrude itself upon the thoughts of the pleasureseeker.

The England of Rowlandson was, it must be remembered, a very different England from that in which we now live. Rough, jovial, and robust, both in mind and body, men were anything but averse to pleasantries and witticisms which would to-day be characterized as coarse and outrageous. Iew people showed themselves anxious to reform their neighbour, and if occasionally they did, public opinion extended small support to such efforts. The race was strong, and had small sympathy for weak ness in any form or shape, and no mercy if it scented hypocrisy or cant. All this may seem a digression, but in making a just estimate of Rowlandson's work it is necessary to bear these things in mind.

Again, we must not look for any great depth or jrofundity of feeling in Rowlandson's drawings, for he ever preferred to snatch the passing smile of leauty or the hearty guffaw of the countryman, though in his sketches of the humbler classes we may observe traces of a sympathy which is none the less keen by reason of its restraint. Inspired by animated nature, he is usually peculiarly happy, and his horses, whilst anatomically excellent, convey an extraordinary idea of life and movement which many more ambitious pencils have failed (1) attain.

Old George Cruickshank was wont to say that as a marine painter Rowlandson was unrivalled ; but as a matter of fact he is seen at his best in his Trawings of women. Almost invariably graceful and elegant, their smiling faces breathe a spirit of fun and good nature which is captivating in the extreme. Indeed, it is well known that several of Rowlandson's female portraits have been misaken for sketches by Gainsborough and Morland, nd it is highly probabie that yet many others still intinue to pass as such.
If fault is to be found, it is that his fair ones tre occasionally too robust and voluptuous in appear-unce-the result, no doubt, of the artist's early raining in a Paris studio, where he studied whilst taying with a French aunt, who was very fond of him. This lady left him a considerable sum ( $£_{7}, 000$ ), which in due course Rowlandson lost at the gaming table, as he almost invariably did any money which came into his possession.

Endowed with superabundant versatility, this very quality became a source of artistic weakness, for gifterl with the faculty of comically illustrating the most whimsical ideas and situations without the slightest effort, both habit and inclination soon caused him to abandon that serious side of art, in which, according to contemporary accounts, he was so well fitterl to excel.

Notwithstanding that in life and conduct Rowlandson was careless and extravagant to the point of folly, he was ever, when money maters were concernerl, rigrorously scrupulous, and though at times in sore financial straits, would never knowingly allow any of his productions to be passed off as the work of others who enjoyed great reputations and commander big prices, though had he consented to do so his book of imitations, "Rowlandson's Imitations of Modern Drawings " ( 1784.88 ), remains as a convincing proof of how successful he might have been. Lovers of his work should not fail to secure a copy of this folio volume should it come across their path. Without deliberately imitating any particular picture, the artist has contrived to snatch the method of every one of the masters whom he selects, and in doing so almost entirely sinks his own individuality. Wheatley, Gainsborough, Cipriani, and Bartulozzi, besides others, are travestied in this manner.

Rowlandson, as is well known, was a most prolific artist, and as a consequence, his original drawings even todayarestill occasion. ally to be pirked up at what are really comparatively morlest prices, though it must be admit. ted that the best of them have long since passed into museums or the hands of private collectors, and therefore come but seldom into the market. Two which are accounterl amongst the cleverest are, or were, at accounted to be Rowlandson's chef d'auvre, abounding, as it does, in excellent portraits of contemporaries, which are scattered here and there as thickly as plums in a cake. It may be mentioned that the fair vocalist is Mrs. Weicksel, in her time a great favourite at the Gardens, and the mother of the famous and popular Mrs. Billington.

In 1789 a very interesting and spirited series of racing prints made their appearance, in which Rowlandson displayed his best manner of drawing. In Windsor Castle, and have twice been loaned for public whibition he the late Quect. These are the "Freneh Review" and the "English Review."

Another, which is certainly a masterpiece, hangs in a Norfolk country house after an exile in France. This is a view of Angelo's fencing-school during a bout, in which the celebrated Chevalier d Eion is engaged. Its life and vigour are quite extraordinary, as is the dexterity with which the grouping of the numerous figures is arranged. The whale composition is spirited in the extreme.

"Vauxhall Gardens," engraved by R. Pollard, aquatinted ly F. Jukes, is, however, generally one of these we see the celebrated Colonel O'Kelly, owner of "Eclipse," who, unlike the majority of sportsmen, amassed a considerable fortune upon the turf. He is represented riding upon a stout cob, carrying his crutch; in the same plate is the Prince Regent.

Another of the same series shows this reteran of the turf giving some final instructions to his jockey. Colonel OKelly, indeed, appears to have been a great favourite with the artist, for a water-colour exists depicting " Colonel O'Kelly enjoying a private trial previous to his making a match." This, as far as is known, has never been engraver, though isibly impressions of it may have been struck and , it sight of.
A pretty print, which has little or nothing of the ricature in its composition, is "Liberty and Fame Iroducing Female Patriotism to Britannia" ( 1784 ). he figures are exceedingly graceful and elegant, liherty and Fame" being shown conducting the beautiful Duchess of Devonshire to receive the laurels of victory from the hands of Britannia.
"The Cries of London" (1799) do not, I think, show the artist at his best, for besides the fact that the subjects chosen for illustration are not particularly happy, the execution is inferior to that displayed in Rowlandson's earlier compositions. Nevertheless, like all his work, they are clever, and now that London cries are things of the past, interesting and curious.
"A Sailor's Family" ( 1787 ) shows great felicity of execution. Indeed, the whole composition of this picture is graceful and pleasing in the extreme. it is a charming work.

As specimens of rough humour, "The Paviours" Delight" and "The Chairmen's Terror" are, in heir way, excellent. In the latter is shown the Saleway of St. James's Palace, and if we may jurlge fom the little scene in the background the sentries f 1792 probably found their duties less irksome an do those who so stolidly pace up and down 1 the present day.
Amongst the caricatures of Rowlandson which deal ith Napoleon, there is one which is especially orthy of attention. This is "Death and Buonaarte" (1814). The conqueror of Austerlitz sits with is head between his hands upon a drum, whilst leath, seated on a cannon, parodies his altitude, and gazes into his eyes. In the background the Allied Armies are represented routing the lirench. The whole composition rises above the ordinary level of caricature, and strikes the imagination no less by reason of its strength than by the truth of its inspira. tion.

As a rule, Rowlandson is far more lenient towards France than his contem. porary, Gillray. His residence in Paris, which capital he knew well, has doubthess something to do with this. French influence, indeed, is occasionally very apparent in his work, and at the present day he is far more highly appreciated across the Channel than in the country which gave him birth.

The drawing here reproduced in colour on page +7 depiets the famous "Old Q." (the Maryuis of (Queensberry) walking with one of those fair ones to whose society he was so partial. Discovered some time ago in an old portfolio, it has, as far ats the present writer knows, never been engraved or reproduced. Nomention is made of it by Mr. (iregro in his book on Rowlandson. Both of the figures are in the artist's best manner, youth and age being very happily contranted-the crabbed old face in the forearound forming an admirable foil for the smiling rountenance of heauty.

It is probable that this picture was painted between 1780 and 1790 , which may be said to have been Rowlandson's best period. His later work is not nearly so refined in execution, whilst a certain poverty of invention is to be discerned in it.

The cause, perhaps, was that costurne was becoming less decorative and more sombre, and, consequently. less suited to his style. Be this as it may, after 18:0 we seem to see the pretty nymphs of 1785 grown

Says the "Dictionary of National Biography" "He appears to have had no family," which seems a rather enigmatical statement, but at all events one quite in keepins with the artists happygolucky rlisposition.

In England at the present day, a sumewhat canting generation, which with superbly unconscious humour associates art with schemes of social reform, frowns rather than smiles at Rowlandson's robust pleasantries. To the super-refined (that is to say, those who cover a lack of refinement with an assumption of what they suppose that quality to be), to the austere, and to those by coarse and ugly, their grace and charm evaporaterl with the century which has passed away.

As an old man, Rowlandson lost touch of the public taste, for the England of 1820 harl ceaserl to be the merry, roystering Englanil of his youth. Essentially of the eighteenth century, he had, towards the encl of his life, quite outlived his time, and, consequently, found himself lost, as it were, amidst a more serinus generation. The ruugh, jovial, rollicking pleasure-lovers of his youth had, for the most part, lange since thrown their last main and drunk their last toast, whilst vapid sentimentality and emasculate l'uritanism were alrearly showing signs of existence. His day of artistic celebrity was for the time being over, and it was in comparative obscurity that he dien in 1827 .
 nature dull of comprehension, his work-frark. vigorous, and unrestrained-can of necessity make no appeal. In France, however, where public taste is more highly educated and in no way confused by

The custom of bestowing medals as indiidual rewards for naval and military services may be said to date from the reign of Queen Flizabeth.

THE ARMADA MEDAL—OBVERSE
It is, however, doubtful whether they were intended to be worn as decorations after the manner of our modern war-medals, and there is nothing to show that the issue was general. They were most probably bestowed on individuals for distinguished services, and not generally on the whole body. They were, as a rule, worn from the neck, suspended by a rhain or ribbon, and in Nicholas' "History of Medals" he states that they were often worn in the hat.

The medals issued in Queen Elizabeth's reign were almost exclusively for naval services; and King Charles I. instituted the first recorded reward for military services. The Queen's medal was for services rendered against the Spanish Armada, and the King's was given to Sir Robert Welch, an officer of the Royalist Cavalry, who recovered the Koyal Standard at the battle of Edge Hill, after it had heen captured by the Parliamentary forces.

The first recorded issue of medals to all officers ind men taking part in a battle were those distriluted after the battle of Dunbar in $165^{\circ}$. The fficers received small oval gold medals, and the men arger ones in silver. From that time no general istribution of war medals took place until the laterloo medal was issued in 1817 . Officers and Idiers alike received the same medal, and no ieparture has since been made from the rule then stablished.
It was not until 1848 that a medal was issued to he survivors of the British army which fought in ine Peninsular. Several times in previous years the subject had been mooted in Parliament, but the strongest opponent to rewarding the rank and file was, strange to say, the man who had gained most by their bravery, namely, the Duke of Wellington. He held that as the principal officers had been rewarded by gold medals and crosses, it was unnecessary to recognize the services of the remainder; but fortunately wiser counsels prevailed, and a medal was subsequently authorized and distributed. Since that time every man, officer as well as private, has received a medal for his services in any campaign for which a medal has been issued.

Many of the war-medais issued, besides their value to the recipients, serve a useful purpose in shewing the dress worn by the troops during the campaign, and cannot fail to be of the greatest interest to the future military historian. It is, in the writer's opinion, a great pity that this principle has not been carried out on all war medals, instead of the meaningless emblematic figures so frequently employed. lor example, the reverse of the medal given to the army of the Punjab in 1849 gives a very good idea of the uniform worn by the infantry soldiers of the period. The same may be said of the medal originally issued for the nist Ashantee war; and the Afghan medal for $1878-80$ gives an excellent representation of a column of artillery, cavalry, and infantry on the march.

The medals issued for Ghuznee in 1839 , and the second Jellahabad medal of 1842 , give a very fair idea of the two forts, and many of the earlier medals issued by the Honourable East India Company give useful representations of the costumes worn by their native troops of the period. If some rule of this sort could be systematically carried out, medals would not only be of use in rewarding the recipient, but might be made in addition of considerable his. torical value. The Indian Gemeral Service Medal of 1895 carries out the idea in the ligures of the British and native soldiers on the reverse who are

THE WATERLOO MBMAL-REVERSE supporting the flag, but in the medals since issued for the wars in East. ern, Central, and southern Africa the emblematic design has been again resorted to.

Before the issue of the Navy Gencral Service Medal of 1848 , it had been left to prisate enterprise to reward the officers and men who had fought the battles of the Nile and Trafalgar, although a few officers of the highest rank had previously received the naval gold medal. Mr. Davidson, of St. James' Square, I.ondon. I.ord Nelson's prize agent, at his own expense presented gold, silver, bromesilt, and bronze medals, according to the rank of the recipient, to all the survivors of the Battle of the Nile. After the Battle of Trafalgar, Matthew Boulton, the eminent engineer of Birmingham, applied for and obtained permission to present a medal to each of the survivors. They were issued in gold, silver, and pewter, and were highly priaed by the recipients. From that time until the Chartered Company of South Africa were permitted to distribute medals to troops engaged in Mashonaland and Rhodesia in 1893 and 1896 , no private individual has been granted permission to issue medals as honorary awards.
The Honourable East India Company might reasonably claim to be the institutors of the motern custom of bestowing a medal on every individual taking part in a campaign. This practice was begun in $1 ; 8_{4}$ in the case of a campaign in the West of India. With the exception of that for Seringapatam, all the earlier medals were given to native troops only, but since, and including the medal given for Ghuznee in 1839 , the medals given by the Honourable East India Company and the Indian Ciovernment have been shared by furopean and native troops alike.

The medal given in 1854 for the war in Burmah in $185^{2}$ was subsequently, on Lord Dalhousie's suggestion, adopted as a general service medial, and was used until replaced by the Indian General Service Medal of 1895 . It was used for no less than twentyone wars, each commemorated by a different clasp. The advisability of using a medal for so many different campaigns is, in the opinion of the writer, open to cloubt. As regards this particular medal, the fact of there being no date, either on the obverse or reverse, would in the event of the clasp becoming detached render it extremely difficult for the numismatical student of the future to say for what service or when it had been granted. Morewer, the ribloon in all cases being the same, who could say, when the ribbon alone is worn, as in mess or undress uniform, for which of the campaigns commemorated, or indeed for how many of them, the officer or soldier was decorated? Although it might lead to a multiplicity of medals, the writer would urge the advisability of a different medal and ribbon being used for each campaign.

The first medals to have clasps added to them for different actions were the gold crosses and medals given for the Peninsular War. No other instances of this custom occur until the authorization of a medal for the Sutlej War in 1845 . Since then the system has been generally adopted.

In the case of the medal for the present war in South Africa no fewer than twenty-four different clasps have been issued. Since 1794 no medals have been issued with chains for suspension. so that that year may be taken as the inauguration of the modern custom of wearing medals attached to a riblon. The first authorized ribbon was white edged with dark blue, and was issued with the gold naval medals of 5794 . This riblon was subsequently used for the Navy General Service Medals of 1848 . The ribbon adopted for the first military medals was red with blue edges, and was first used with the gold medal issued for the Battle of Maida. It was atterwards used in different widths for the military gold crosses and medals for the P'eninsular, for the first Burmese medal, for the Waterloo medal and the Military General Service Medal, and, lastly, for the Distinguished Service Order in 1886.

where it had passed throngh many hands. It bears the legend "Beati Pacifici" beneath the Royal Arms of England in relief, and the date 1617 . On it are also three silver marks hard to decipher, one being apparently a lion passant, another probably representing a lions face. It is conjectured that it was sent ly King James I. of England to his unfortumate daughter Jlizalieth, Electress Palatine, afterwards Queen of Bohemia. This royal larly was the mother of a numerous family, and the cup may have been imented as a christening gift for one of her children. The date, 1617, corresponds with that of the year when her son Charles Louis was born. The cup looks as if it had suffered in the stormy days of the l'alatinate and the attack on Heirlelbers Castle. Its brim bears the following inscription: "By Verturus Living Doth alle honour Rise: An eville Life lrings [nfamie and shame: To follow his Comel that is most Wise bring endles Giory and Immortal fame." Round the base of the bowl we real : "Such . as . on . earth

Tudor roses in relief and two lines of mottoes, the lirst being: "We shall . fale + But sure the . name . of evill . duers . shall . rott Eternall"; the second: "lior . every one . shall . Receive . according . to the . Works . rlome + unto . their Lott :" The bowl is highly rlecoraterl. The decoration includes, besides the Royal Arms, a griffin, a semi-couchant stag with large branches and with a coronet round its neck and a cable wound round its holy. Between the stag and the Rnyal Arms is a phoenix surrounderl by flames rising from a large crown with five balls alternating with the Tudor roses. The stem of this remarkable cup is ornamented with thistles.

A small octave French tract of 1584 , of which we should much like to learn more, has lately come into our hands. Subjoined is a Supposed fac-simile of the title page and of folio Montaigne ${ }_{23}$. The fact is that this piece relates Discovery. to an incident of French history which in ${ }^{158} 4$ was some two years old. Henry III. had been advised and had consented to accord to the capitals of certain provinces of France local Courts of Justice, in order to facilitate and expedite legal proceedings. The volume in our hands has to do with consequent arrangements made for Guienne at Bordeaux in 1582-3; and here is the point. From 158 I to 1584 the Mayor of Bordeaux was no less a person than Michel de Montaigne, and in his official capacity the whole matter must have necessarily come within his cognizance, and have been carried out under his sanction. The Essayist had been successively on friendly terms with Charles IX. and Henry III.; we have a letter from the latter to him, dated November 25th, 1581, commanding him to return forthwith from Italy and assume the mayoralty in which the King had confirmed him; and that he paid personal attention to the duties of the office, so delicate and difficult an one in those times of trouble, the municipal minute of December roth, $58_{3}$, subscribed by him and the jurats, goes sume way to shew. It is, of course, only one, accidentally preserved, out of hundreds of such papers, and a comparison of the above-mentioned minute may assist in illustrating the Essayist's official style.

Thus, premising that the pamphlet before us was written in 1582 , that the official representative of the King at that juncture was Montaigne, and that such a document or manifesto, could scarcely in the nature of things have been drawn up and subsequently printed without his knowledge and permission, we reach a farther stage in the matter, and that is the Authorship. We do not desire to be too precipitate and sanguine; but let us put this question: Who in Bordeaux could have penned such a thing, save one? Again, who, save one, would have interlarded his discourse with quotations from ancient Greek and Latin authors, till almost half the text became quotation? Thirdly, who, save the same, would have cited Chrisippus, one of Montaigne's fawourite men, and a writer, of whose name not a soul in Guienne, not many in Paris itself, had probably ever heard?

It is at least possible that we hold in our hands a hitherto unidentified production of the Essayist, bearing on its face certain idiosyncrasies, which co-operate with the local circumstance, to favour and support such a conclusion. When we shewed the volume to a learned friend, he in an instant put his finger on the following Montaignesque sentence at folio $\mathrm{xxv}:-$ " Vn home cest bien malade quand il ne sent point sou mal: mais quand nö seulemét il le sent \&\& le cognoit, mais aussi scait A entered les causes \& les remedes dicelui, il est ia à demy query." Others might be found. The ja for deja is itself characteristic.

Among book collectors specimens of ancient typ(graphy used to be ordinarily known as editioncs principes by persons desirous of
" Incunabula." exhibiting their acquaintance with classical tongues, or simply early printed books. Within the last few years, however, a fashion has arisen of describing this class of literary monument as Incunabula. So far, so good. But let us define our terms. What does Incunabula signify? The average reply will be, "Early printed books; fifteeners." It is not so. All incunabula, it is true enough, are early printed books and fifteeners; but not one in a thousand of the latter are incunabula. This word, as is sufficiently obvious, imports productions belonging to the typographical cradle, or, in other terms, it comprehends, and comprehends only, such books as appeared in a given country at the very outset of the setting up there of a printing press. This explanation may strike some as superfluous, and even impertinent; and therefore it is necessary to go so far as to mention that when the curator of a public institution was recently asked what sort of books he had leen adding to the collection, he answered, " In cunabula." But he meant, as it turned out, works belonging to the fifteenth century-a widely different affair.

Again, there are two species of Incunabula. If. for example, a volume bears date 1480 , and others. appurtenant to the same locality, exist from 1460 downward, the 1480 item has no pretension what ever to so lofty a title. But supposing that it i actually the first specimen of the press of that place it is ad hoc a member of the family-of the typ graphical aristocracy. It has, however, merely loca rank, because 1480 is a fairly advanced period o time, and in the region of its provenance, and in deed in almost every other, thousands of publication may have preceded it. On the other hand, th appellation of which we are speaking is distinct and emphatically proper to the noble group o German prototypes which saw the light between 145

Paste. feror Maximilian I., and issued without a regular title ahout 1530 . Not more than four perfect and three impurfect copies exist of this work, but only one other of the complete ceiomplars besides the present, and that in a public library, exhibits the peculiarity of having blank kaves bound up at the end at or near the time of publication ; and on these have been pasted supplementary ingravings of other subjects. In the copy under notice there are three and twenty blank leaves, and seven of these thus occupied, making the total number of illustrations 95 . It is a comparatively recent opinion that the engraver of the whole scries was Lconard Beckh. As the book is in its original pig-stin binding, the blanks may have been inserted for the purpose of admitting other additions as they occurred.

The most conspicuous feature in the supplement to this extraordinary book is a very fine impression in white paste, representing a Gothic screen with three compartments, in which are full-length figures of the patron saints of Ratisbon-SS. Dionysius, Emeran, and Wolfgang; no other specimen of this exact type seems to be known. It should be added that the Quaritch copy of the book and that at Vienna above cited vary in the supplemental matter, and at the same time are the only ones possessing more than eightyeight wooll-cuts. The former is understood to have been sold by Thomas Thorpe, the bookseller, for $\mathcal{L}_{5} 515 \mathrm{~s}$, about 1830 , to the person from whose representative it has been acquirel, and there is no apparent indication of it ever having occurred at an auction.

Wi: are emabled, through the kindness of one of our subscribers, to give an illustration of a very fine William and Mary wine-cooler or wineA Seventeenth cistern. This piece is a splemelid Century Wine specimen of the style of the period Cistern. and of a familiar and favourite design. It is in very good prescrvation. Its ample capacity renders it none the less graceful; it is one of a very limited school of large vessels of the kind, which were chiefly in fashion from about 1666 and for some sixty years afterwards. It is principally characterised by the uniformity of its bold ellipses, bossed out, altemating with vertical stems having inverted husks, surmounted by cronels, each bearing a pine. The bod is quite plain. It either end are

1 se lions' masks and swivel handes, having central 1 ,ulds.
Environing the neck is an embossed belt of acanthus $f$ bation intertwined with ribboning. The flat rim of a e vessel has a slight concare sectional moulding with : ooved lines, finishing with a boklly gadrooned edge. I is supported by four claw-and-ball feet. Itsgirth at the widest. exclusive of the protruding lion masks, is whte-four inches; height, thirteen inches. Its weight fahout six hundred ounces. Connoisseurs will recorsnise that the set of three jars and covers at Knole ( 1690 ) are partly adorned with a cory similar ornamentation - namels, the alternate Mipses and stems with husks. The marks of the wine cooler are: London, (rig) ( $\vec{r}$.) maker's mark (eg on tae base.

The Pope has acquired for the Vatican the large nd valuable collection of papal coins formerly the property of Cardinal Lorenzo Randi, who

Northampton House, Charing Cross, better and last known as Northumberland House, is generally Old reputed to have beon buile in 1605 by Northumberland House. Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton. The Earl furnished the designs, and the architects were Bernard Jansen and Gerard Crismas. The frontage was 162 feet. This mansion formed part of Shakespeares London, and there may be the additional interest that view of it. Singularly enough, in the presence $0^{\circ}$ the alleged writing on the back (for I did no: see it): "Rd. As the canvas is stated to have been in bad condition, the year assigned may have been mistaken for 1697 ; and even so it is by far the earliest representation extant, so far as I can learn, of this famous historical mansion. the Jansen who assisted in its construction was related to Cornelius Jansen, who painted the likeness of the poet. When 1 was lately at Weston-super-Mare (writes a correspondent), I saw on a wall at the bouse of Miss Baker, sister of Mr. Ernest Baker, a nephew of the late Mr. J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps, a painting of the residence, purporting to be as it appeared about two years after its original erection, with the name of the artist on the back and the date 1607. Halliwell-Phillipps had bought the picture, but took it to be a copy; but some time after, when it passed by gift to Miss Baker's father, it was cleaned and framed, and the particulars on the back for the first time brought to light. In Mr. Wheatley's "Cunningham," 1891 , there is a good account of Northumberland House and its history, but no reference to any contemporary or even fairly early

We are glad to hear that Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are about to publish a new edition of Mrs. Palliser's "History of Lace,"
A Standard Book on Lace. revised and enlarged under the editorship of M. Jourdain and Alice Dryden. This important work was originally published thirty-six years ago, and went through several editions, both in English and French, and it is recognised as the standard work on the subject. It has been out of print for several years, and copies are now very scarce. The new edition will be enlarged to royal $8 v o$, retaining all the original illustrations and being supplemented by some 150 new reproductions. The revisers have felt the responsibility of correcting anything that the late Mrs. Palliser wrote, but modern research has made some alterations necessary.

I spectalist's exhibition of the stamps of the $\therefore$ uth African Colonies, illustrative of the war in South Africa, was held at the rooms

I hibition
of South
African Siamps. of the Philatelic Society of London, in Arundel Street, London, on Saturday, the 16 th November, 1901 . The dense $\operatorname{fog}$ which prevailed at the time -riously hampered collectors in their inspection of the exhibits, and probably prevented many from even attending. Those who braved the fog were more than compensated for their discomfort, for a finer show of South African stamps has never before lreen gathered together. It was in every respect a specialist's day.

The Earl of Crawforl and Mr. H. J. Duveen luth exhibited the rarest stamps of the Transvaal in spotiess condition. There were errors and red surcharges in all their rarity. Many varieties were inclurled that are rarely ever seen : stamps that could wol lee purchased for less than from $£ 30$ to $£ 100$ apiece were much in evidence.

Orange River Colony War Provisionals were shown in complete panes of 60 by Mr. C. J. Daun, including the rarities of omitted figures and letters. All the lirst printing with level stops was shown in complete manes. In all the collection comprised no less than tur'y complete panes of 60 . The rare 5 s . mixed stops was shown in a block of eight. Mr. G. F. H. (iilison, of the Manchester Society, also sent a very fine lot of the same stamps.

Mr. W. Dorning Beckton, President of the Manrhester Philatelic Society, made a splendid display of Griqualands, which comprised the MS. Id. on 41. Blue; "G.W." in red on 4d., a block of 17 ; 1877 large "G.s," an almost double pane, from the bottom of the sheet; an entire pane of large "G.s" "n the id.; 6d. large "G.'s" in pairs and blocks; is.. large "G.'s," block of 26 unused; 5 s. large " (i.s." block of I 3 unused. three types, the only large block known; small "G.," in black, on 4 d., whith outer line, a sreat rarity; and the $\frac{1}{2} \mathrm{~d}$. double sureharge, both in black, one inverted.

British Bechuanalands were shown by the Earl of (rawford in splendid unused condition. Of the rare 4rl. red surcharge there were two blocks of four.

British South Africa was shown by Mr. Eliot Levy, and included most of the rarities.

In Cape Colony, Mr. Vernon Roberts's triangulars were enough to make even a specialist very envious. The collection comprised, in wood-blocks, no less than 75 of the $1 d$. and 120 of the $4 d$. Altogether. there were over a thousand triangulars, mostly in unuserl, mint condition.

In Mafekings, the Earl of Crawford, Mr. A. H. Stamford, and Mr. Oldfield made up a grand display of all the rarities of these much-criticised souvenirs of the gallant stand of the little band under BadenPowell. Mr. 'Г. W. Hall exhibited his fine collection of Natal, arranged in his own neat style of descriptive lettering. Swaziland and Stellaland were shown by the Earl of Crawford; and Mr. J. H. Abbott, of Manchester, contributed a compiete exhibit of Zululand.

The pink of condition, whether in used or unused, was the characteristic of the exhibition throughout. In the matter of arrangement, the exhibition, in being confined to the one room of the premier society, was very much a case of getting a quart into a pint pot. In the early morning, when there were few visitors, it was easy to inspect the stamps. but in the afternoon, despite the help of the fog, the place was inconvenient!y crowded.

We have to correct a mistake in our description of the copy of the Kelmscott "Chaucer" illustrated on page 271 in The Connolsseur for The December. The actual copy there illus"Chaucer." trated was nri, as was stated, that which "Chaucer." belonged to the late Mr. F. S. Ellis. The photugraph for our illustration was taken by Messrs. Walker and Cockerell from the vellum copy of the "Chaucer" in the possession of Mr. Emery Walker. Though the design of the binding is the same as that of Mr. Fillis's copy, no two bindings are exactly alike, for the reason that all are matle by hand. Hence, if the mistake were not corrected, it might at some future time cause misleading conclusions.

We regret that in quoting in the November number of Tine Connoisseur (page 206) from the book on Reynolds by Mr. Algemon Ciraves and Mr. T. V. Cronin, we attributed that work to Mr. Graves alone.

The first number of S.AL.E PRICES (supple ment to The Connoisseve) is now published, and may he had of all booksellers and newsagents, or the supplement will be sent post free from this office for eight shillings and sixpence a year. luture numbers will be issued simultaneously with The Convoisseur, and subscribers to the magazine may have the supplement sent to them by paying eight shillings a year.

The " Collection Visited" in the February number of The Connoisseur will be the picture collection of Mr. Alfred de Rothschild.

ness of her subject has caused the author no litle trouble, and so the classification of the matter dealt with is, perhaps, not as clear as could be desires. Still, to the student, and even more to the collector and amateur, this book is quite invalualle ; it very rightly points out the close connection that exists hetween decoration proper (of walls, doors, ceilings, etr.) and the articles of furniture and "bibelots" which can only be shown off to their best advantage in their natural surroundings. As the season advances, a slight improvement may be noted in the average merit of the objects offered in the various London sale-rooms.
Pictures. As yet nothing of real excellence has presented itself, and there are no sensational prices to record; still, among the pictures that have changed hands during the last few weeks, there have undoubtedly been some few worthy of the attention of the connoisseur, and therefore of the journal that bears his name. They have, indeed, not been numerous, but they served in some slight degree to relieve the depressing array of harren mediocrities (to use no stronger term) which have covered the walls of auction rooms at the exhilitions preceding each sale.

To the weary traveller who has dragged his melancholy footsteps through the desert of spurious old masters, "faked" Early English portraits, and forged signatures, it is positively refreshing to come upon a genuine Jacob Ruysdael.

This remarkable and happy exception occurred at Messrs. Foster's gallery in Pall Mall, where a "I Iandscape with Torrent," the work of the most rumantic of old Dutch landscape painters, was includer in the sale of November 27 th. It was one of a small collection of fourteen pictures assembled, said the catalogue, at the commencement of last century by the late William Hammond, Esq., of Great Yarmouth, by whose descendants they were leing sold. The picture, though in a dirty condition, and coated with ancient varnish, seemed of fair quality; it measured 24 ins. by 20 ins., and the signature, though possibly re-painted, was probably genuine. The proverl that "good wine needs no bush " was once more verified by the fact that, unobtrusively presented as it was in the midst of a quantity of valueless paintings, it fetched 660 guineas. It is unfortunate that Mr. William Hammond did not show the same judgment in the selection of his other pictures, or the names of Hobbema, Ostade, G. Dow, and Jan Steen which were attached to them might have been in some degree justified.

A sixteenth century portrait, said io le "Lady Jane Grey," by Zucchero, figured in the same sale, and changerl hands at ror gs.

A few days previously, in the same rooms, a set of nine sketches in pen and ink, ascribed to Rembrandt, went for 190 gs . They were mostly biblical subjects, "The Crucifixion," " Stable in Bethlehem," "Christ in the Temple," "Tubit and the Angel," etc., and were of some interest, though not very characteristic of the master.

The sales at Christie's on November 16th, 23 rd, ${ }_{25}$ th, and 30 th may be lightly passed over. The first included a large canvas, hard, prosaic and uninteresting, painted last year by B. W. Leader, R.A. It was called "The Old English Village Church," and the hammer fell upon it at 330 gs . On the Saturday following, a "Portrait of a Lady," in black dress, an old Dutch picture of fair quality, attributed to Cornelius Janssens, fetched 200 gs .; while a couple of portraits of " Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Robertson," of Gallowflat, the very association of which with the name of $\operatorname{Sir} \mathrm{H}$. Kaeburn was a positive insult to the great Scotch painter, fetched 5 gs . and 2 gs . respectively.
Another Leader, "Sand Dunes," exhibited at the Academy in 1891, appeared at Messrs. Robinson and Fisher's on November 28th. This picture. which measures 5 ft .9 ins. by 3 ft .9 iris., is by this time well known to frequenters of sale-rooms; it is to be hoped that it found a buyer at 460 gs ., and that this was its " positively last appearance in public." The sale included also a "Portrait of Queen Charlotte" and another of a "Youth with a Dog," both attributed to Gainshorough for some reason best known to their owners, knocked dowr at 600 gs . and 50 gs . respentively; and a decorative Early English " Portait of a Lady with a Dog' ( 210 gs .).

At Edinburgh, on November 23 rd, Mr. Dowelconducted a sale of modern pictures, at which ver. fair prices were obtained. Part of the works sub mitted were from the collection of the late Ear: of Moray, of Darnaway Castle, and others were the

15 ry; of Mrs. MDougal, of Dalhousie Castle. "J in Knox rebuking Queen Mary," by W. P. Fir..i, R.A., fetched 160 gs.; "Making Yam," by Jol. Philip, R.A., $135 \mathrm{gs}$. ; "The Holy-Island Saı. Is," a water colour by Sam Bough, 125 gs.; "L.n Wyvis: Rain Clearing Off," by the same artist, 116 as. ; "The Crofters Team," by J. Farquharson, $9 . g^{5}$. ; "Holy Well at Barncluith," by Alex. Fraser, $58 \%$
Irum various parts of the Continent come reports of important sales of pictures, both ancient and morlern. In Paris business has started in earnest at the Hôtel Drouot, and prices, on the whole, seem satisfactory, although there, as in London, sensational auctions can scarcely be expected at this time of the year.

The chief interest of the sale conducted by Nessrs. Léon Tual and Messrs. Bernheim Jeune on Viwember 2 ist centred in the "Portrait of Narlame N. Stael," by Ingres (sce illustration). It is sairl 1.: le an early work of the famous painter of " I. Apothéose d'Homère" and " Ia Source," both in 1!. I ouvre, and it fetched 12,000 frs. ( $£ 480$ ), a'hough its authorship gave rise to some - Iroversy. This was the highest price reacherl the sale, which was chiefly composed of ks of a later date. A sketchy Corot, "Les I heaux," not very happy in composition, but Ited with the artist's chararteristic lightness nuch, only reached 3,700 frs. ( $£ 148$ ); lantin I 'ur was represented by four flower pieces "' '10 great impertance, the best of which, "White 1 es in a Glass," fetched $1,4 \geq 0$ frs., and one of

Monsieur lazare Weiller, whose collection of modern pictures was dispersed at the Hôtel Drouot on lovember 28th, was for a great many years a firm and exclusive partisan of the old masters; it was only under the influence of a long and close personal friendship with Puvis de Chavanues that he came to appreciate the qualities of modern painters and became a patron of the impressionists. In his chateau of Osny he was not afrain, from that time forth, to hang works signed Corot, Puvis de Chavannes, Monet, Sisley, or l'issarro, beside his old favourites by Rubens, Largillière, Nattier, or Lancret. Recently, however, having sold the Chateau d'Osny, he found his Paris house too small to sontain his entire collection, and so decided to part with the modern section. The 54 pictures and 16 water-colours of which it was compused realised 293,000 francs, or nearly $£ 12,000$.
"Lutus pro patria," a large allegorical composition by Puris de Chavannes (sce illustration on next page), worthy of being rankel among the artist's finest work, was bought, after keen competition, for 40,000 frs. ( $£ 1,600$ ) by Messrs. Bernheim Jeune, the experts who directed the sale. "I a Famille," another work ly the same painter, fetched 10,500 frs. ( $£ 420$ ), and his pastel. "L.Enfant Prodigue," 10,100 frs. ( $£ 4 \mathrm{O}_{4}$ ). Two beautiful examples by Corot, neither, however, containing water, represented the school of 1830 : "La Cour ile la lerme," from the Faure collection, reacherl 23,000 frs. ( $£ 920$ ), and "Entrée dAbleville" was cheap at 17,500 frs. ( $£ 700$ ) ; this latter picture is peculiarly interesting as being one of the last that Corot painted; it is dated 1875, and the master died early in Fehruary of that year. Many other remarkable works changed hands at this sale, of which the following may be mentioned: Cazin, "Dans les Prairies de Hollande," 15,500 frs. ;
 "Lee Rassin I'Argenteuil," $[2,000 \mathrm{frs}$; and "La Gare St. Lazare," 8,100 frs.; Dagnan-Bouveret, "La Douleur dOrphée," 7,000 frs.; "Lépine, " Le Canal de Caen," 8,0 0 frs.

At the Lepke rooms in Berlin on Nowember igh, a number of interesting pictures changed hands, three reaching exactly 8,000 marks ( $£ 400$ ) each. These were a "Vision of St. Francis," by Murillo, "The Hero of the Village," by Michael Munkacsy, and a "Portrait of a Man," by William Liebl. "On the Shore," by Edward Hildebrandt, fetched 5,000 marks ( $£ 250$ ), two smaller works by him going for 600 marks each; Professor Hubert Herkomer's "Bearded Man" realised 4,000 marks ( $£ 200$ ), and Oswald Achenbach's "Flower Festival in I.ubiacco" 5.820 marks ( $£^{291}$ ). A pastel, "Study of an Old Man," by the veteran Adolf von Menzel, was knocked duwn at 1,400 marks ( $£ 70$ ).
for $£ 126$ at the same rooms on December 3 II. Another famous pair, "A Visit to the Boarding School" and "A Visit to the Child at Nurse." by W. Ward after Morland, reached a higher figue at Munich ( 3,580 marks, or $£ 179$ ) than at Christie's ( $£ 117125$.) ; of course, these apparent discrepancies may be due to the quality of the impressions or the condition of the prints. However, the highest price paid as yet this season for a pair of Morland colourprints was 175 guineas for "St. James's Park" and "A Tea Garden," by E. D. Soiron, at Christies, on November 27th; a similar pair going for $\mathcal{E} 128$ the following week.

At the former sale the following high prices were

The prices obtained for engravings and colourprints at Christie's on the 1 gth and 27 th November and 3 rd December clearly show that Prints. the "slump" which some people expected would set in this season has not yet arrived, although it may quite conceivably reveal itself at any moment. Meanwhile, fine impressions of colour-prints after Morland and mezzotints after Sir Joshua Reynolds and others continue to fetch huge prices, and that not only in London, but also in France and in Germany:

At the beginning of the season there has been quite a crop of Morland engravings, and in more cases than one the same subjects have already recurred several times. The well-known pair, "A Party Angling" and "The Anglers" Repast," printed in colours by Ward and Keating, has appeared four times, thrice at Christie's and once at Munich. It is a remarkable fact that the prices of two pairs sold almost on the same day, one in Iondon and one in Munich, varied by exactly $£_{2}$; at Christie's, $£_{6} 147$ was paicl, and at Munich, 2,980 marks ( $£ 149$ ) ; the third pair at Christie's about a week later only reached $\mathscr{E} 63$; whilst the fourth went

The sale of the contents of the eleventh century castle of Mainberg, which took place at Lepkes sale room in Berlin, on October 2gll, The Schloss Mainberg Collection. and four following days, and corrprised nearly 2,000 lots, was allude 1 to in our last number. We are no , thanks to our Berlin correspondent, able to give ti $\stackrel{\text { ? }}{ }$ promised details and prices of the most importa $t$ lots, together with a short history of the Castle itse' . with its interesting historical associations.

The Castle of Mainberg is mentioned as far bat: as :000 A.D. as heing in the possession of the M : graves of Schweinfurth, and by 1215 it appears is documentary evilience to have passed into the han $s$ of e Counts of Henneberg, a large portion of whose ury was included in the recent sale. This ly afterwards became a princely one, as we in 1469 that the old castle was the scene of .nificent festivities and tournaments on the a sion of the marriage of William V., Prince of H . meberg, to Margaret, only daughter and heiress (1) : he Duke of Brunswick Luneberg. This lady is cr-lited with the workmanship of a magnificent chasuble ornamented with a large cross, embroidered wilh sacred subjects in high relief in gold and other colours, which was included in the catalogue of the sale.
The Hennebergs having held the castle for over three hundred years, despite many attempts to wrest it from them, eventually sold it in 1542 to Conrad V., Bishop of Wurzberg, in which See it remained till 1796, when it again changed hands, oud became the seat of the Bavarian Government, though only for a comparatively short time, as it was purchased on bloc in 1822 by Wilhelm Sattler, a wealthy commoner of Schweinfurth, who, with his son, thoroughly restored the old castle with the most correct taste, and added largely to the already line collection of art objects. It is owing to the weath of the last owner, a member of the Sattier family, that this practically unique collection has come into the market.
There are probably few castles of such strategic importance as Mainberg that can boast of having rhanged ownership only three times in 800 years, anl each time by purchase, though doubtless during this period more violent methods of acquisition were often attempted.

The contents of the rastle can be divided for present purposes into the sulb-collections of woorl rarvings, painted glass, early German drinking wessels in stoneware, faience and enamelled glass, apons and armour, pictures, metal work, and 1 ic a brac.

Under the first heading come six important lots. :nprising all that remains of the high altar of innerstadt Church, which has always been conered the chef d'aure of the great master carver, emenschneider, of Wuirzburg, whose receipt for $\therefore$ payment of this work still exists, and is dated CCCCLXXXX. Unfortunately, these specimens fifteenth century carving have been painted at more recent date, and one of them considerably tored in other ways; they realised good prices, wever, in spite of this drawback. at Munich for $£ 690 ; £ 280$ was given for the two panels carved in bold relief with Mary washing the feet of Jesus and Mary and Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane; the fine half-length figure of St. Burkardus in full canonicals, with his cloak-clasp and mitre set with precious stones, and holding a crozier in his right hand, fetched $£ 185$; and two carved angels, also by Riemenschneider, $£ 120$; while the Holy Family, with the head of the infant Christ of much later date and inferior workmanship, only realised $£ 5^{2}$ ios. A fine figure of St. Martin on horse-back by an unknown German carver of the end of the fifteenth century, reached $£_{20}^{20}$ while three relief panels of scriptural subjects by Michael Wohlgemuth, the master of Albert Dürer, went cheap at $£^{65}$. A carved triptych, with polychrome decorations by a Swabian master of the sixteenth century, representing the Annunciation and Adoration on the wings and the Birth of Christ on the central panel, was bought for $£ 65$, in good preservation.

The collection of painted glass comprised some fine early Gothic specimens, notably a small square most exquisitely painted with two knights in cap-à-pic armour of unimpeachable design, from the old cathedral of Gelnhausen, a unique piece, which went for $£^{82}$ ios.; while $£^{225}$ was paid for two very early specimens of large size. The fine early "Schweizer Hochzeitscheiben" fetched about $£ 20$ apiece, and should interest readers of Mr. Campbell Dodgson's interesting article on these old windows in our last number.

From the Teutonic collector's stancpoint, the clou, perhaps, of the whole sale was the unrivalled and highly representative collection of early German drinking vessels of stoneware, faience and enamelled glass, comprising specimens from practically every known factory of importance, including those of Cologne, Tierburg, Rouen, Fricken, Nassau, Nuremburg, Bayreuth, Altenburg, and Kreussen, the last-named factory being specially well represented by Apostle, Planet, Elector, and Hunting Cups. By $f_{i}$ the highest price for an individual vessel was : So for the unique Hirschvogel jug, the finest $\dot{k}$ inn example of the work of the celebrated family (. hat name who were master potters at Nuremburg fr m iffi to 1560 . This particular specimen was 2 inches high and decorated with scenes from the he of Christ, notably the Crucifixion, in bold relief; a irl was well worth the price paid for it. Two Nreussener mugs sold respectively for $\mathscr{f} 65$ and $\therefore 62$ 1os., and other decorated drinking vessels of various makes fetched from $\mathcal{L} 15$ to $£ 36$ apiece.

The armour, if genuine, would seem to have sold for very low figures, to judge from the prices and descriptions to hand, as the highest price paid for a complete set of sixteenth century fluted armour in polished steel was only $£ 45$; most of the prices for other suits and weapons being less than half that amount. A remarkably interesting lot was the fine thirteenth century gilt bronze I imoges dish, richly chased and omamented with medallions of thompleve enamel in red and green and various shades of blue; this piece realised $£ 113$ ros. Twenty-six engraved gun-locks, dating between the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and many of them richly engraved, only brought fir , or under ifs. apiece.

The collection of snuff boxes, which from the illustrated description in the catalogue seems to have been very fine, realised distinctly disappointing prices, as did the Oriental porcelain ; in fact, all the money seems to have been reserwed for articles of native manufacture, an apparently fine bust of a ciild by Franz du Quesnoy only fetching $\mathcal{f} 35$, while $\mathscr{E} 29$ was the top price recorded for a single piece of Chinese porcelain, a vase is inches high, with coloured decorations on a blue ground.

A richly-illuminated manuscrijt containing the rhronicles of the See of Wirzburg from 688 to 1519, bound in leather, with stamped gold ornaments, only reached $£ 3^{\circ}$; while the highest price for any individual book was $£ 5^{i}$, paid for an imperect volume printed at Nuremburg in 1517 . A ierman translation of Terence's " Eunuch," printed t Ulm in 1486 , and illustrated with twenty-eight oloured wood cuts, and bound in wood, with leather rack and tabs, reached $£ 47$ ios.

All the furniture seems to have gone cheap, a :ne Nuremburg Renaissance cabinet only making E17. Of course, the present state of commercial lepression in Germany probably re-acted on general yrices, and the number of lots would also have a owering effect.

No important library came under the hammer in London between November 4th, when the late Mr. Frederick S. Ellis's collection was dispersed, and the end of the month. On the other hand, there occurred for sale, now at Sotheby's, now at Holgsons, in Chancery Lane, a number of lots from various sources genuinely interesting to the collector. Volumes bearing the imprint of the Doves Press, recently established by Messrs. Cobden Sanderson and Emery Walker, bid fair so far to out-Kelmscott the Kelmscotts. The earliest of the now famous Morris issues, the "Glittering Plain" of 1891 , once, at any rate, changed hands publicly at fifty per cent. only above published price. In January of the present year a little "lacitus" in Latin came from the Doves P'ress- 225 of them at 25 . each. An example was sold in Wellington Street during May for $£ 412 s .$, and on November zoth a second fetched no less than $£ 75$ s. Undeniably this is a swift rise in money value, but the question remains: Is it sure as well as swift?Particular attention may be directed to four Wordsworth pieces. The British Museum appears to possess no copy of the " (3ie to Charles Lamb," whose text occupies about seven pages of the four leaves, the last page being alogether blank. It is deemed to have been privately printed in 1835 , perhaps in Westmorland, and a presentation copy, apparently in original wrapper, inscribed "E. Cookson, from Wm. Wordsworth," fetched £28. Cunceivably this is unique. The "Ote on the Instal. lation of H.R.H. Prince Alhert as Chancellor of the University of Cambrilge," the text within illuminatel and coloured borders, inscribed " Hannah Cookson, from her affectionate friend, William Wordsworth, Rydal Mount, 18 th July, $18+7$, " lirought $£ 15$. 'lime and again the puet's "Thanksgiving Ude," first edition, 1816 , has changed hanls for one or two pounds at auction-in boards, that is to say. The fact that a copy in original wrapper, to "Miss Watson, with Mrs. Wordsworti's compliments," sprang up to 10 guineas, is, therefore, noteworthy. Again, $£ 10$ is a high figure for cditioncs principes, original wrappers, of "The Waggoner" and " Peter I3cll."

One of the most lucrative directions for the man of literary as well as of bibliographical judgment is undoubtedly to acquire betimes the early published work of a poet destined for fame. We think at once of Mr. Meredith's Poems of 1851 , of Browning's "Pauline," of Byron's "Poems on Various Occa. sions"-for "Fugitive Pieces" is known by one perfect copy only, that in the possession of Mr. Buxton Forman-of Keats, of Shelley, and even of Matthew Arnold, whose "Strayed Reveller," published at 4 s. 6d. in 1849 , fetched $£ 3$ ros. on November 20th. A rarity in this kind is William Blake's "Poetical Sketches," 1783 , the contents of whose 70 pages were written between his twelfth and his twentieth years. A perfect example, in modern binding, brought $£ 40$ in 1896 ; and on November 2 ist a copy, its title mended, and the leaf of advertisement in fac-simile, $£_{12} 10$. If we mistake not, this identical copy changed hands at $£^{6} 17 \mathrm{~s} .6 \mathrm{~d}$. in 1898 . What is described as the first edition, with a new title-page, bearing the date 1822 instead of 1811 , of Shelley's "St. Irvyne," made £ro.

Mr. Henley's vigorous onslaught on the "Shorter Catechist" is perhaps responsible for the fact that a rare piece of Stevensonia has regained a portion of its fall from $£ 59$ in March to $£^{24} 5$ s. in July. "An Object of l'ity" was written by Lady Jersey, Graham Balfour, R.L.S., and others, in Samoa; and in "Objects of Pity" "the Man Haggard" made answer. The two trifles were printed at Amsterdam in 1892. On November 28th, $£^{27}$ ros. was paid for them. In the four days' sale of which this lot formed a part we find several early printed books of interest. S. Augustine's "De Civitate Dei," printerl by Nicholas Jenson, Venice, 1475 , in original stamped leather binding, made $£ 135^{5}$ s. ; the first edition, 1485-6, of "Machasor sue Julaicarum 1'recum Breviarum," four leaves in Vol. i. in contemporary MS., $£ 30^{\circ}$; a Roman Missal, printed in red and black in glagolitic characters, Venice, $1528, £^{28}$ 10s.; the "Incomincia il Libro degli Homini lamosi," first edition, 1476, £24-this is said to be the first and only book printed at Pogliano; "The XII. Bukes of Eneados of the l'amose Poete Virgil," London, 1553 , bound up with a Berthelet piece, $1530, £ 3{ }^{1}$; and Petrarch's "Trionli et Sonetti," Venice, 1497, six full-page wood-cuts, unbound, several leaves repaired or remargined, $£_{7} 15$ s.

A fine copy, in original boards, uncut, of Westmacott's "The English $\mathrm{S}_{\mathrm{p}}$;" $1825-6$, Vol. i. lacking one leaf of list of illustrations, and the title of Vol. ii. slightly defective, brought $£_{3} 8$ at Hodgson's on November zist. This is perhaps a record. An example, in the original pictorial wrappers, fetched $£ 3^{2}$ ios. three years ago. Burchell's "Travels in the Interior of Southern Africa," 1832, was until recently to be found in parcels of miscellania. Now, however, it is valued at $£ 8$. Another book which is rising is Richardson's "Old English Man sions," $1841-8$, the four series of which brought $£ 8{ }^{1} 5 \mathrm{~s}$. A full set, 66 volumes, of the invaluable "Dictionary of National Biography," 1885-1901, came under the hammer for the first time on Novem. ber 8th. The volumes were in half-morocco, and against an issue value of $£ 66$, brought $£ 49$. In the same Chancery Lane rooms two attractive autograph letters were sold. One was written by the King, as I'rince of Wales, to Lord Alfred Paget, anent a projected yachting trip. His Majesty alludes to the "sailors' fun" and the "shake down" on board. It was valued at $£ 415 \mathrm{~s}$. The other is an irate note from J. M. W. Turner to Mr. J. Holworthy, the recipient of some of his drawings: " your letter treats them both so like a commission that I feel my pride wounded and my independence roused . . . money is out of the question"-which fetched $£ 5 \quad 15 \mathrm{~s}$.

Far and away the most noteworthy property in its kind to come under the hammer during November was the collection of documents, letters, deeds, etc., in part brought together by Colonel John Moore, an officer in the Republican Army and one of the Regicides. This collection was supplementerl by Sir John Moore, of Kentwell, Suffolk, and, after passing through the hands of the late Mr. Hart Logan, M.P., was sold on the 2 gth and 3 oth under the instructions of Captain Stewart. A holograph letter of Sir Christopher Wren, anent Appleby school, brought £49; a letter from Wentworth, afterwards Earl of Strafford, July 28th, 1631, £49; a fragment of two pages of the original MS. of Scott's "Kenilworth," $\mathcal{L}^{21}$ ios.; two letters by John Bradshawe, who presided at the Trial of Charles 1., £51; four documents signed by Oliver Cromwell, 1649-51, fos 38 12s. 6d.; five letters of Lord liairfax, General of the Parliamentary liorces, $£ 4415 \mathrm{~s}$. ; two letters respectively by the tenth Farl of Northumberland and Samuel Pepys, $£ 19$ 15s. and $£ 19$ ios.; and 60 lots, draft letters, etc., by Colonel John Moore himself, including his holograph will, July 20 th, $1649, £_{163}$ is. 6 d . In most cases there were portraits. The collection fetched $£ 959{ }^{1} 3 \mathrm{~s}$.

The London sale rooms are now in full swing, and several good sales have recently taken place in the provinces, where prices are often

and Bric-a-brac. quite as high as those realised in the best Iondon rooms. The reasons for this are family commissions and local interest of a semi-sentimental nature, and the fact ( HRISTiEs opened appropriately enough with the sal of the art collection of the late Mr. Cosmo Nowkhouse, art writer and connoisseur, on Novemlier $14^{\text {th. }}$ 'There were several other properties in the sale. Mr. Monkhouse's collection, like that of marly another virtuoso, was more conspicuous for its eclectic interest than its commercial value. The lersian faience and pottery realised the best average prices; an early octagonal tile, decorated in the centre with arabesques in green, mauve and buff, oll a blue ground, and with a long inscription round the border, fetched $£ 10$. A Solon ware plaque, with a nymph and cupid, signed "L. Solon," Eo los.; and a pair of early Chippendale armchairs, with open backs, carved with a scroll at top, on cabriole legs with claw feet, reached E.35 14s. sold for $E^{68}{ }_{5}$ s. on November 12 th. At ()swestry, on November 16 th, sume good prices were mate for Gerrsian silver. In Dublin, at a sale on November 16th, a pair of Oriental jars, derorated with flowers on black groumd, fetched £:85, 12 Chippemble chairs $\mathcal{E}_{7}$, a Louis XIV. black buhl writing table $£ 140$, a lBattersea enamel casket $£ 100$, and a pair of gilt eighteenih rentury French metal wall lights $£ 100$.

At Edinburgh, Messrs. Duwell sold an eighteenth century perlestal sideboaril for £.50 8s.

At a sale of some of the effects of Mr. Macaulay, of Kel Hall, near Belfast, some fine furniture changed hands at tantalisingly low prices, according to the London standard, if the articles were as fine as described, which we have every reason to believe they were. The best prices were: Sheratom wardrobe, $£ 33$ 12s.; an oak cupboard, 1643, $£_{29} 8$ s.; an oak cabinet, carved in relief, $£ 22$ is ; a fine hall chest, 168: $£ 187 \mathrm{~s} .6 \mathrm{dl}$. A Chippenda.e sideloard and seven chairs on suite only marie $£ 19$ 8s. 6cl.; a Chippendale settee, £ 12 12s.; two Elizabethan oak chairs, $£ 4$ apiece. Many fue lirst editions of modern books went much under London prices.

Tue l'aris sales during November have contained no great sensations, although a good deal of respectable bric-a-brac changed hands at, in many cases, distinctly reasonable prices. On November 8th some grod prices were made for fine Chinese and Dresden China, several pairs of jars of famille rose making from $£ 40$ to $£ 100$. The Dresden figures fetched from $£ 5$ to $£ 20$, the latter price being paid for a female figure. A fan with Mme. du Barry's munugram fetched $£^{24}$. On November ${ }^{1} 5$ th sume Hispano Moresque ware sold at prices from $£ 4$ to £. 35 ; on the 2oth, five pieces of Mennecy china fetched $f 0$; some late Renaissance tapestries ranged from $£ 50$ to $£ 120$. Felicien Rops still keeps on the upward grade, and his prices are well maintained, if not improverl. On the 26 th two old Rouen plates realised $£ 22$. At the same sale some lots of Louis XV. and XVI. furniture were secured for very reasonable sums. A pair of early eighteenth century wrought-iron gates from Clairvaux Abbey were sold at Troyes last month for $£ .568$.

On November 19th, at Messirs. 1)ebenham and storr's, a fine Charles II. chased tankard made 50s. per 0\%, while a Quect Silver. Anne Tankard which had unfortunately been recently gilt inside, only reached 24 s. per oz., although in point of shape, workmanship and hallmarks it left nothing to be desired.

Messrs. Fosters sale of antique plate on Thurday, Niwember 28 th, revealed a strong tone, and the fine pieces fetched tup prices. A large quantity of Georgian silver changed hands at about zos. pur oz. ; while of the toppriced lots, an old Collepe tumbler of Charles ii., 1677, 6 oz. 2 dwt., marte 1 qos. per uz; a William III. 1699 fluted beake, 3 az. 16 dwt., 82s. per oz.; a pair of Queen Anre candlesticks, 8 ins. high, gadroon ellges and octag' 1 bases, 18 oz . 10 dwt., 76 s . per uz.; a set of four Queen Anne circular salt cellars, if oz., 42 s . pi oz.; two Charles II. flat spoons, with chased bowi 1674,3 oz. 12 dwt., made $£ 16$ all at, or near: 8gs. per 1.2.; an oll Irish square waite,

At Brighton, on October 23 rd, Messrs. Jenner 3ul Dell sold some Georgian silver for grod prices: lhough a two-handled goblet, engraved with a coat of arms, 1748 , seemed cheap at 17 s . Grl. per az .

It Tunbridge Wells, on the zist inst., Mr. Carter sald about $\mathrm{r}, 200 \mathrm{oz}$. of antique silver and some good spocimens of Sheffield. An early Georgian tea $\because$ Uly made 195 . 6d. per oz. An urn-shaped wineder of Sheffield plate, in good state, realised 5, and two fine Sheffield salvers, embossed and raved, $£$ ri 6 and $£$ ' 5 tos.

Pinere have only been two regular coin sales ently, and at neither of them were there any ns. sensational prices, although a good average was maintained. The aucteers in each case were Messrs. Sotheby.
It the sale of the coins and medals of the late W. L. Stradling, and some other properties, the . 5 gln -Saxon and English examples were the most prominent, and consequently were honoured by the best bids. 'The two days' sale returned $£ 818$ 2s. 6 l.

The highest price paid for any individual lot was $£ .30$ for a " line" sovereign of (bueen Mary, rated 1554, weighins $2.37!\frac{1}{2}$ grs., in fine condition; only (w) others of this date are known. $£ 1125.64$. was paid for a fine Cromwell "broad" in brilliant state, with grained elge by Simon; and $£ 515$ s. for a penny of Harthacnut struck at Oxforl, in fine state. A Commonwealth simpence, usual type, 1659 , perfect nitint mark, only one other known of this date, fetched $£ 7$. A fine specimen of the Charles I. Oxforrl pound piece, 1642 , made $\mathcal{E}$ ro 15 s. ; a Shrewshury half-crown of same monarch and flate, uncommon type, $\mathscr{E}^{17} 5_{5}$ s.; a Charles I. Bristol wopence, no mint mark, $£ 815$ s.; n James I. crown of second coinage, with rare mint mark, $£ 82 \mathrm{~s} .6 \mathrm{f}$. ; a James I. crown of first coinage, mint mark thistle hearl, very fine, $£ 10$; a Charles I. Kilkenny or Blacksmith's half-crown, struck by the conferierate Catholics, $£ 5$ ros. ; a quantity of seventeenth century trade tokens, $£ 9$ los., in two lots, 152 in all. An interesting item of the sale, though not a highpriced lot, were six old Roman coin moulals in terra cotta, found in the turbary of Chlton-lolden, which fetched $£=8$ s., concluded the first days sale.

T'wo pattern pennies of sentimental interest were the first important lots on the second day: one struck August 6th, 1830 , in proclamation of our late Gueen and Fimpress as heiress presumptive tu the throne, on the accession of William IV., and the reverse was struck from the die of the Britannia penny of George Ill.: it fetched $£ 44$ 4s. The other, which made $\mathcal{E 6} 10$ os, was struck on the same date, in memory of our late Queen's mother, the Duchess of Kent. Both these ouins were from the Soho mint. A very rare bronzed prowt Kentucky pattern halfpenny, dated 1796 , made $\mathcal{E} 5$ 2s. 6d. ; a fine William IV. pattern crown, 1831 , by Wyon, $£ 9$ : three pennies of Stephen, Henry VI. and Edward IV., in fine condition, made $\mathcal{E}$ ri sos.; an Oliver Cromwell crown, half-crown and shilling, 1658 , hy Simon, usual type, a fine set, $£^{8}$ tos.

THe sale held on November 26 th of the collection of H . Temple, Esq., comprised English coins only from Henry VIlI. to Queen Victoria, and realised $£ 487$ i6s. for 173 lots. The sale openell well, as the first lot was the fifth highest priced of the day, being a "fine" sovereign of Henry VIIT., second coinage of eighteenth year, with mint mark, and in very fine state, $\mathscr{E}$ io 15 s. A"fine" sovereign of Queen Mary, 1553 , in fine state, made $\mathcal{E}$ II 5 s., as against the $£ 30$ for the almost unique 1554 issue in the Stradling sale; a Charles 1. Onford treble sovereign, $1643, \npreceq 1115 s$. a Shrewsbury haif-pound in silver, 1642 , very fine and unpublished, onl! marle $£ 3$ tos., as against $£ 1+$ ros. for the Montagu specimen. 'Ihe Shrewshury crown of the same date made £ 414 s . A Cromwell halfcrown by Simon, 1656, with "H.I." instead of "H.l.l.," very rare for this date, in good condition, went for 66 . A hammered silver Charles 11 . halfcrown by Simon, without value or inner circle, fetched $£ 555$ s. ; a very fine William and Mary 1642 crown, $£_{5} 7$ s. 6d.; a Queen Anne gold five guinea piece, 1703 , very fine and rate, with the " Devonshire" tone, £I5; a George llI. pattern crown, 1817, by Wyon, brilliant state, $\mathcal{L} 5$ i7s. 6d.; a rare pattern shilling, $1_{764}$, by Tanner, from the EgmontBieber sale, $£ 3$ r 5 s. ; a pattern crown of William IV. in silver, by Wyon, 183 , $£ 9$ iss. ( $£ 9$ in Stradings sale); a silver pattern crown of Queen Victoria, 1845 , by Wyon, brilliant state, $£ 85$ s.; a pattern Guthic crown, 1846 , by Wyon, brilliant state, $£ 8$ is.

At Rollesby, on October 3 rd , a gold pound of Queen Elizabeth, in fine state, made $£ 4$, a better price cotcris paribus than the one in the Temple sale at Sotheby's.

At the Broom Hall sale, a number of Bardic medals of the seventeenth century fetched from $£ 2$ 1os. to $£ 4$ ros, apiece.

Messrs. Glendining's two days' war medal sale, December 3 rd and 4 th, again broke several records,

The principal feature of Messrs. Puttick and Simpson's four days sale on November 12 th to 15 th, were the Roumanial stamps, of which an exceptionally fine lot changer hands at good prices. The best prices realise were: Bavarian unpaid 18952 in red on 3 pf., grey fine unused pair on entire original envelope, $£ 22$ This is the first time this pair has ever appearet at auction; indeed, only two other similar pair: are known. l'russia 18572 sgr . dark blue, unused mint state, fine vertical pair, $£^{25}$ ios.; Roumania Moldavia 18548 r paras blue on blue, fine copy

The series of "slip decorated pieces" takes us back to a much earlier period than the English delft with which we concluded in December. They are not unworthy of the attention of one who values, in ancient pottery, powerful effects of colour displayed upon robust shapes. The workmanship is rude, as befits the coarseness of the materials employed. But in the very selection of these native clays and metallic ores, made use of almost in their natural state; in the decorative instinct which has guided the untutored hand of the potter, bent on embellishing his work to the best of his ability, we find a technical soundness coupled with an originality of treatment seldom to be seen in an equal degree upon earthen pots of such a modest order.

In the early Staffordshire pot works the process of slip decoration seems to have long been employed in preference to all others. The "slip" was made by diluting clay with water into the consistency of a batter. By pouring cout the hiquid through a quill into cursive jets or separate clots upon the surtace of the piece to be lecorated, fanciful raceries were formed, the nlour of which conansted with that of the round. Highly convenonal flowers, heraldic evices, and grotesque fures constituted the nck of ornamental moies at the disposal of

No. I.-staffordsettre tyg
the slip decorator. The particular pieces for the adornnent of which he reserved his most ambitious efforts were the Tys and the Show-dish.

The Tyg was an antique institution in Staffordshire, its name being derived from the Saxon Tigcl. This vessel was used to brew the possct on festive occasions. It was provided with three, four, or more sets of handles, so when it stood in the centre of the table the guest whose turn it was to drink out of it could take hold of the Tyg by the handle that was in front of him (No. i.). When intended for presentation, the pot was "slipped on "round the rim with the Cbristian name and surname of the party-generally a good housewife-to whom it was dedicated (No. ii.); the broad letters of the inscription, studded over with minite dots, formed the most effective part of the decoration. The ingenious dispositions of the handles were modified according to the fancy of the maker; some of their numberless varieties are illustrated in my collection.

The Show-dishes, as they may be called-for they displayed a style of decoration so elaborate as to make them, surely. too good for use-were, as a rule, presentation pieces, and had, perhaps, a special destination. In Germany, large dishes of the same periorl were called "weading dishes." In the wedding festivities of the middle class the dish was placed upon a table at the entrance of the banqueting-room. As they came in, all the guests were expected to deposit into it such sums of money as they chose to contribute towards the cost of the entertainment and the benefit of the newly - married conuple.

The same custom prevailed in England for a long time.

A common potter of no better or worse ability than the majority of his mates, has, however, marle his name almost famous in ceramic history by affixing it very frequently upon the works of his hand (No. v.). Thomas Toft long worked in the Potteries-the name is still a common one in the district-but we have good cause to believe that, like many of his brother-craftsmen, he tried his fortunes in more than one place. It is not possible to localise the spot on which his signed dishes were made; all we can say is that the greater number of them have been found on the borders of North Wales, where common pottery was extensively made at the time. A real "nest" of these dishes may be seen in Chirk Castle, near Ruabon, where they have remained undisturbed ever since they left the makers' workshop. They comprise 2 Thomas Toft, I Ralph Toft, 2 Charles Toft, 5 Ralph Simpson, i William Taylor, and a few unsigned ones. The conclusion one may draw from the presence of so many specimens in a castle, the owner of which had certainly not collecterd them for the love of their uncouth look, is that they were the tribute in kind that the potters of the neighbourhood had, accord. ing to a long-establishert ctistom, to present once a year to the Lord of the Manor. Chirk Castle was the seat of Sir Thomas Middleton, Lord Mayor of London at the time of the Revolution. The subject represented upon one of the dishes is King Charles in the trec, flanked right and left with the lion and the unicorn; in this we sec a direct homage to the staunch loyalty from which Sir Thomas Mid dleton never swerved at the most crilical moments of his life.

Slip decorated cradles (No. iii.) were occasionally made and inscribed with big letters as christening presents. Drinking jugs and mugs, having had to stand a free use, are now rarely met with; the one in my collection is one of the very few that hav? survived rough treatment.
At a later period decoration was no longer left to the fancy of the workman. Into the form upo: which the clay was to be pressed to the shape of a dish, the ornamental subject was engraved in a broad outline, which, of course, came out in relief upon the piece. The remaining part of the work was simply to fill with coloured slips the fields marked out by the raised lines (No. vi.). Such a process admitted of an unlimited reproduction of the same subject, and we find, consequently, many replicas of the same dish.

Marbling the surface with slips of contrasting colours was generally adopted in the manufacture

No. II.-staffordshire tyg of popular ware. Narrow bands of yellow an 1 brown colour were trailed through a quill upon the clay still in the wet state; then with a piec? of leather, indented at the edge, the horizontal strip s were combed down in a vertical direction, after th method still used for "graining" by the hous painter. I have often heard old inhabitants of th: Potteries say that, in the time of their grandfathe there was scarcely one piece of household crocker in town or country, which was not marbled in th. manner. At the present day, excavations made $c$ the site of some old pot works will bring to light enormous heaps of fragments; but a perfect specimen of marbled ware is no longer to be obtained.

The red tea-pot and cream-jug shewn in No. iv. call to mind the name of the Elers, of whose style of manufacture these diminutive pieces have long been thought to be the sole representatives. We need not repeat here the well-known tale of the difificulties which the Elers had to contend with in that far-away land of the Potteries between the year 1690 , when they came to settle among the rustic and boorish pot-makers of Burslem, and i7io, the approximate date of their departure. But we must once again lay stress upon the influence that the highly-refined productions of the aristocratic foreigners were bound to exert, and have, in effect, exerted, upon the transformation of the coarse ways and means of the traditional trade of the district; that influence can never be over-estimated. Before the arrival of the Dutch brothers nothing was made there but heavy vessels of brown and yellow marl, shining with a thick coating of galena; when they left the place, the making of a light and brightly. coloured earthenware, neatly stamped over with sharp relief, and a curious white stoneware, thin, delicate, and smeared with a salt-glaze, of which they had brought the secret from their country, was in full swing in the local pot works.

Even in our days of universal improvement an Elers red tea pot commands the admiration of practical potters; a select example should be one of the glories of the collection. The fine texture 0 : the well-levigated clay lends itself to the practice of a skilful workmanship. A cover fits into it: groove with such perfect accuracy that the two parts could not meet more truly had they beent utrned in metal. So dense is the material that it can receive a polish equal to that of porphyry; I have myself tried the experiment with complete success. Let it be understood that I am referring to the rare specimens that may be, with certainty, attributed to the Elers. As the ware continued to be made many years after they had left the l'otteries, only a very few among the immense quantity of the socalled Elers tea-pots still extant in the collections may be considered as the work of their hands. They are never marked; perfection of manufacture is the safest guide to identification; however skilfully made, a mercenary imitation always keeps at a respectful distance from the original piece which has been taken as a model. Choice examples of their work may be seen in the continental museums, where they are invariably mistaken for Chinese buccaros and Böttger's red porcelain.

The simple method of ornamentation adopted by the Elers, which consisted in stamping minute reliefs over the field of the piece by means of metal seals, has been followed by Astbury, Twyford, and other of their imitators. Its use was, however, extended by these latter to the decoration of glazed earthenware of various colours. No. vii. is an example of the application of red reliefs upon yellow ground;

No. VII.-G(AZED Earthenware: WHTI STAMIPD ORNAMENTS

Want of space does not allow me to give to the important subject of English "salt-glaze" the full treatment that it demands. The foremost quality of the ware is, in my estimation, that it is eminently English in character. It matters little whether the method of glazing with salt did or did not originate in England-as a matter of fact, I have demonstrated elsewhere that it was imported from Germany, and that the Elers introduced it into the Potteriesone point remains undeniable: it is that, by a new combination of technical processes and the unconventional taste displayed in their application, the Staffordshire potters succeeded in producing a ware which, in outward appearance, differs altogether from anything ever made in other countries.

No. IX.-oid burslem tes-tot

Salt-glaze ware realised, in its chief features, most of the desiderata of the times. The body was white, hard, translucid in the thinnest parts, and it could be worked into a great levity of structure; the glaze was bright, thin, and colourless. The peculiar way in which the pot-maker proceeded in the making of objects, always of small size, imparted to the work a striking look of originality. Calling in the assistance of a modeller was then an unknown practice. The moulds were not taken from a model in full relief, as was done in after times, but carved out of several pieces of dry clay, each portion being sunk and engraved, after the manner of die-sinking, with elaborate designs only one degree removed from the crude naizete of the slip decorator. litted together accurately, the separate shells formed the complete mould. Before being used it was fired in the oven. To obtain a proof out of the mould, slip was poured into it, and allowed to stay until a sufficient thickness of clay had adhered to the sides by absorption. The superfluous slip having been rejected, the proof formed of the partly-solidified deposit, gradually dried, contracted, and crould then be taken out of the mould. To the use of this process, called "casting," is due the wafer-like appearance of the early salt-glaze; it has now become generally employed, but we do not know any other instance of its application in Europe to the manufacture of pottery at a corresponding period.

No. VIII.-asthery ware

Costly china and silver plate graced the board of the wealthy; upon the table of the middle class families dainty salt-glaze appeared as a welcome substitute. We cannot estimate the success it obtained from the comparatively small number of specimens that have come down to us; the ware was extremely fragile and, besides, quickly went out of fashion. It is from the extraordinary number of models produced during its short vogue that we may realise how considerable the demand for it must have been at one moment. The variety of those models is, indeed, endless. Not to speak of the pieces of a purely ormamental character, one may say that there is scarcely any sulject in the animal or vegetable kingdom that has not been turned into a tea-pot or a jug by the mould-cutter (No. x.). 1 shall not attempt to enumerate his fanciful conceptions; any selection made from among the best types would give but an inadequate idea of their surprising eccentricity. The illustrations given here are but a few odd representatives.
In No. xiii. we have, perhaps, the most ambitious piece, as to size and decoration, of the art of the salt-glaze potter. It was made on the occasion of the Portobello victory, and has a full-length figure of Admiral Vernon, with the royal arms. Another mug of large size, which might be attributerl to the same worker, bears a Toft-like interpretation of Hogarth's "Midnight Conversation" (No. xii.). The coat-of-arms of Leveson-Gower and of three other Staffordshire families are embossed on the sides-a rare instance of a salt-glaze model having been placed under aristocratic patronage. An interesting document for the history of the trade will be found in the brown and white bowl illustrated on page 85 (No. xvii.). It is the only example I know of the patent taken in 1732 by Kalph Shaw, of Burslem, on the strength of which he attempted to prevent all other potters from making salt-glaze wares.

PORTOBELLO DRINKING MUG

Among the many decorative processes employed in connection with that manufacture may be mentioned piercing, engine-turning, basket work, marbling with coloured bodies, etc. The latest achievement was the introduction of enamel painting (No. xi.). So attractive were the results obtained in that way that it was thought it gave to painted salt-glaze a chance to rival expensive china. But to compete against the charms of real porcelain and struggle against the abundant supply of it that was being thrown on the market was a hopeless task, so it was soon all over with the temporary success of the substitute. lirom that moment the industry sank into rapid decline. The heary shapes and commonplace ornamentation of the late productions have little in common with the dainty forms and quaint embossments of the wafer-like pieces of the outset.

A collection limited to the illustration of the innumerable varieties of English salt-glaze would be a revelation to many a ceramic connoisseur. He might find an inducement to form such a collection in the knowlerlge of the fact that in these days of artful shams and fraurlulent impositions, it is, perhaps, the only kind of pottery which has not yet

No. XV.-Eartilenware vitil coloured glazes

More plentiful than those of any other branches of the early manufacture are the remaining examples of the cream-coloured ware and of the various specialities related to it. With the discovery of T. Astbury and the introduction of pounded fint into the composition of the body, common earthenware had entered the course of improvements which brought it gradually to its present state of perfection. Originally made in conjunction with the salt-glaze ware, the very same models and moulds were userl for the cream colour, but with a very different result. The dulness and monotony of the white stoneware was replaced, in the latter case, by a harmonious blending of brightly-coloured glazes. In some cases the precious finish of the workmanship, coupled with the fascinating play of transparent enamels, render an earthenware piece worthy of the praises accorcled only to the most attractive productions of the ceramic art (No. xv.).

The stamped ornamentation was still currently ir dulged in. A fair imitation of tortoise-shell waobtained by splashing the surface with manganes and letting the colour run down into the meltin: glaze. "Clouded ware" was also the cream colour partially enlivened with dashes of variegated colous (No. xvi.). The brilliancy of the green and yello enamels was so well displayed in the presentmen of fruits and vegetables, and so great was the deman for models of that sort, that there was a Melor a Caulifower, and a Pineapple ware, of which considerable quantity must have been produced.

Agate ware-a technical triumph of our potters-

No. XVI.-Clouded ware jug by wiliedidon was made by super.imposing alternate strata of brown and yellow clays, so as to form a solid block. Out of that block thin slices were transversely cut by means of a brass wire. Pieces could then be constructed by carefully applying these thin bats, marbled and veined throughout like a precious stone, against the sides of a mould (No. xiv.). A covering of blueish glaze still more enhanced the attractiveness of the general effect.

To pass from the fabrics just described to the far-famed Queen's ware would seem quite a natural transition. But as to speak of one of the achievements of the greatest English potter would be to overstep the limits imposed to a collector of preWedgwood pottery, I shall bring here to an end this imperfect account of an incomplete collection. My sincere wishes are that the reader may feel inclined to supplement these terse notes by the study of the standard works; and if, peradventure, he undertakes to bring together, in an unbroken concatenation, the productions of our national ceramic art, he may-more fortunate than I have been my-self-succeed in filling the gaps still left open, and replace the "missing links" in the discontinuous chain of object evidences.

THE ART OF ARTISTIC ADVERTISEMENT IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY BY JOSEPH GREGO

A favolrite branch of collecting in the palmy days of the eighteenth century was the gathering together of what are usually described as " Bartolozzi tickets." Under this general head were included those elegant " artistic trifles," the " benefit tickets," executed con amore by Bartolozzi and his "school" for their compatriots, the musical professors of buth sexes; "admission cards," all designed in graceful classical taste, for concerts, balls, masquerades, and the like: an extensive subject, much esteemed by well-known dilettanti collectors, like Walpole and his friends, who were indefatigable in seeking rare examples for their own scrap-books and folios, or to enrich the collections of their intimates who cultivated the same pretty hobby. The names of collectors who followed this branch of acquisitiveness have been associated with their treasures, like Horace Walpole, Lord Orford, the cultured hermit of Strawberry Hill and St. James's Square, Thomas Walpole, whose name is found written on the backs of numerous choice and costly examples, rare proofs which were secured for his private collection; and fore most to everyone familiar with the topic, the name of Miss Banks will present itself in this special connection, for this enthusiastic collector, the sister of Sir Joseph Banks, was in her day notorious for sparing no pains or expense in amassing the large collection which constituted the hobby of her lifetime, and was presented to the British Museum in 18i8; "well worthy of special and careful attention," wrote the late Andrew Tuer in his monograph upon " Bartolozzi and his Works."

Many famous collections are recorded in the annals of the auction rooms; the sale catalogues of great collections prove that fine and scarce tickets fetched considerable prices at auction at the close of the eighteenth century, running into pounds for "excessive rarities." In later days, the Warwick sale, at Sotheby's, was rich in picked examples; at Christie's, the Ducal collection, formed by $F$. Bartolozzi for his patron, the Duke of I.ucca; and, in the same category, the Bessborough and Ponsonby collections, similarly formed by the artist himself, a labour of love and also of profit; and for those fair patronesses of art, the Duchess of Devonshire, Lady Georgiana Spencer, her sister, Lady Duncannon, and ather encouraging friendly patrons and patronesses belonging to the wealthy Earls of Spencer's families, and similar collections, abundantly rich in the best examples, from which the present writer's collection has been gathered-all demonstrate the oldfashioned vogue for these artistic souvenirs.

n. rials of eighteenth century productions prove native appreciation of fine art, which in1 emulation amongst collectors of the epoch question. A propos of the special "ticket" uted for the Lord Mayor of London, 1775 , 1. his friends, Cipriani and Bartolozzi, we have ti. interesting evidice of John Wilkes, vin wrote to his friend, "PhiloUilkes" Samuel Cut. ler):-" Permit me to send you a Ticket, in which l was concerned, for the Faster lestival of my Mayoralty. I saved it from the wreck of those Ifspoiled by doorkeepers. In my opinion, it does honour to the two great artists, Cipriani and Bartolozzi, and to a country which dislinguishes their merit, and I hope will emulate it."

For the moment we leave the consideration of Mansion House tickets, and that much-desired work of art, the ori. rinal diploma of membership of the Royal Academy of . Irts, still used by the icademy, which ac--orded its full lonours to Cipriani .nd Bartolozzi, the - tists who conjointly secuted this work, gether with similar asterpieces of cogree interest. The present paper is directed to illusating a phase of the same subject, demonstrating 'iat the value of "artistic advertising " by the most tined graphic arts was popularly recognised and preciated in the eighteenth century. So marked is the merit of these productions, that although lhese artistic plates have found but few successful successors or imitators, the originals have been used over and over again by later generations, proving that while the excellent qualities of these produc. tions have happily preserved the originals from oblivion, later artists have not been fortunate in emulating the works of Bartolozzi and his school to the extent it was fair to anticipate. The foremost argument amongst collec. tors in this relationship is found in the circumstance, as concerns Bartolozzi himself, that these tickets were the actual handiwork of the artist. His larger plates bore his name, but it was understood they were practically the outcome of his school. The forwarding work was assigned to his nיmerous pupils, Bartolozzi finishing the plates in his own inimitable and masterly fashion. With the "small deer" of "tickets" - for the most part executed in the friendly spirit of paying homage through the medium of Bartolozzi's own especial art to sister arts which he lovedit was for arts sake the artist laboured at his very best, these beautiful procluctions being actually gratuitously presented by the artists to their countrymen, who were delighting by their talents the British public, whose purse-strings were loosened to reward their professional services. Considerable sources of profit were the benefits liberally accorded to singers, musicians, and dancers. In thus effectively promoting the popularity of professional benefits, and no less in the great cause of charity, Bartolozzi's graver was always freely at the call of bcnefficiarcs. When enlisted in conferring benefits of this nature, the artist worked at his best, with an enthusiastic glow in his bosom, which seemingly extended to his etching point and his graver alike; and, time being valuable, it is understood that the slight designs in most cases were sketched with the point direct on to the copper, much improved in the process by Bartolozzi's trained hanrl-for he was an admirable draughtsmanetched, bitten in, and finished off with the burin with incredible celerity. It is recorded that many elaborate plates, finished to perfection, and full of marvellous handiwork, were begun in the morning, and completed before Bartolozzi allowed himself to take his well-earned rest. In the whole series, amounting to hundreds, the technique is absolutely perfect, the hand and eye were equally secure, no evidence of hasty execution is discemible, while the "finish" is always exquisite and master-like. In exeruting these small chefs d'auarc, Bartolozzi realised and revelled in his own exceptional genius and his unmatched proficiency in craftsmanship; he was stimulated by the manipulative cunning of his hand, further knowing full well, by experience, that trifles, apparently thrown off spontaneously and without effort, would be sought with enthusiasm by his admirers in the fashionable world, and bring profit to his musical friends; while it may be seen from his own letters that tickets were paid for at prices which may be reckoned fabulous and out if all proportion to the brief space of time involved in their incubation. For instance, he mentions that his friend Dr. Burney, author of the " History of Music," had to pay 100 guineas for three plates still in the famous Burney collection, illustrating the history of the stage, dramatic and lyric, a greatly valued collection, rich in artistic and illustrative materials, which, like Miss Banks's similarly interesting and extensive collection of tickets, was happily bequeathed to the Print Room of the British Museum. The example of Bartolozzi stimulated the most accomplished of his pupils to professional emulation, and it may be ascertained that the "benefit" and "charitable" tickets engraved by their hands are distinguished by similar proficiency, and worthily sustain the traditions of the master ior classical grace, feeling, and the highest artistic achievement, executed with dexterous facility.

Ii will be seen that a charge of one shilling was made for the original, which was given as the frontispiece to the catalogue, and entitled the holder (i) admission throughout the exhibition : "Catalogue of Capital Drawings, original Desisns of Fans, etc., the property of Mr. Poggi, (1) be exhibited at the rireat Room, late the Royal Academy, l'all Mall, on Monday, the 17th March, ${ }^{7} 78$.

Inother tradesman's ticket is the design of a cherub * aring Mercury's winged cap, indicative of his travel1 is exploits, unloading a bale of merchandise from distant lands, while another cherub is taking account of the contents and setting down the total. A proof ticket in my possession evidently advertised an artist's colourman ; a cherub is grinding colours, Mercury's caduceus by his side indicates his wide travels; another cherul) is drawing, with a palette by his side, practically applying the artist's materials to their purpose. A panoramic view of the Thames in the background introduces St . Paul's Cathedral, London Bridge with the shipping, and the Monument, with the 'lower of London in the distance.

In the characteristic little cut designed for the title page of "Antony Pasquin's Satires," we have Puck, the Spirit of Mischief, raised upon a pedestal formed of volumes of Pasquin's "Satires"; Minerva's Birel of Wisdom has settled upon his two-tared jester's cap; I'uck is protecting himself from the fierce sun rays beneath the shade of his umibella, while the satirist's sharp quill points are dipped in gall to enhance the bitterness of his shafts. symbolical figures support a scroll advertising Macklin's "Poet's Gallery." Engravers, printsellers, picture-restorers, drawing masters, and art associations, like the publishing faculties, were eager to secure the advantage of obtaining artistic "address cards" to advertise their professional headquarters; for the illustration of the present paper typical specimens of each category have been selected for reproduction.

Strephon and Chloe were enlisted into the service of advertising artistically by the same graphic methods the business of "Susanna Burchett, late Miles, Engraver and Printer, 98, Borough" (see page 86).

It is appropriate to find D. Orme, "Historical Engraver to His Majesty and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales," advertising his address, Old Bond Street, in the allegorical taste. The Muse of Painting is represented at an easel; a cherub floating above is crowning the Muse with a wreath of laurels, and at the same time supporting the prince's coronet; the royal crown is held aloft by a companion cherub, further furnished with Fame's trumpet. Amongst the figurative accessories, "Industry" is typified by a bee-hive, and a pyramid shows "Stability."

Three artists were conjointly employed to produce a picture restorer's address card: H. Tresham, R.A., invt., E. F. Burney, delt., and M. N. Bates was the engraver. The Muse of Painting is endeavouring to ward off from a painting on an easel the destructive attacks of Time, armed with his scythe, literally hacking away at the canvas (see page go). The inscription on this card, which is charmingly printed in colours, informs collectors that " F . B ite cleans and restores oil paintings, 43, Berners Strect."

The address card of "Richard Collins, principal enamel and miniature painter to the King, by his Majesty's special appointment," informed his patrons that the artist had "removed to 23 , Pall Mall." This example is a work of art worthy of the occasion. The design is in T. Stothard's best manner, and is well executed by J. Neagle, an acromplished engrav r. The invention is of the order pol 0 lar amongst designers: the fair Mt ie of Painting is shown tracing the $p$ or file of a comely youth from 1 ie shadow thrown on the backgrou d by the light of Cupid's blazing tor $\cdot$. a printseller and picture dealer (sec page 92), introduces the Muse of Painting, armed with a palette and a sheaf of brushes, resting on a portfolio of drawings, while a chubby cherub is looking through the contents. Two fellow cherubs are enjoying a scrap-book of prints. Another card of the same order may have been used by the drawing master to advertise his address; the composition comprises an angel, muse, and sybil. A fair student is engaged with a tablet, on which are drawn a series of antique heads in profile.

Another appropriate and graceful design is one executed by T. Stothard, R.A., a commission from the Socicty of Arts, Adelphi, in its early career; the engraving, by H. C. Shenton, was printed as a headline for the circulars of the Society of Arts, informing subscribers of the honour of their election to membership.

As a compliment to these oldfashioned artistic advertisements comes the recognised fact that modern proficients in the advertising art have been tempted to reproduce Bartolozzi's designs for the purpose of advertising their wares and drawing attention to the particular commodities forming their businesses, having found their advantage in ingeniously adopting particular productions popular in the eighteenth century to their own up-to-date enterprises.

THE MAKING OF A SMALI. COLLECTION BY L. K.

Looking back on one's experiences, it is positively surprising to realise the amount of pleasure, apart from that of possessing the things themselves, one has derived from the making of even a modest "collection." Memory calls to mind the many delightful drives, having for their goal some hitherto unexplored spot; the hours spent once the destination was reached in searching every place that seemed in the least likely to contain treasure of any sort; and then the indescribable satisfaction of coming across a "find"! How on the return journey the prized article was unwrapped and examined if of a size to admit of its removal then and there; if not, how its beauties and merits were discussed, its ultimate resting place decided, and how eagerly it was expected and unpacked! of course, there is another side to the picture-days when, disheartened and weary, one has had to return empty-handed having found nothing; perhaps having had one's enquiries for whatever happened to be the object of that particular search met with, "Oh, yes, I know Mr. (or Mrs.) So-and-so has some rare oid things, but he (or she) is away to day, and I really don't know anything about the business "this last invariably with an air of pride. "Perhaps you could call again?" I confess I know nothing more calculated to exasperate even a sweet-tempered individual than this. The only one thing to counteract the extreme irritation it causes-I speak feelingly -is to reflect that in all probability the "rare old things" exist purely in the imagination of the speaker, and this I believe is often the case.

Another most trying experience is to come across an object-let it be a piece of furniture, china, or what it may-so desirable in every way that it causes one to badly crack, if not actually to break, the Tenth Commandment, and then to find that no amount of persuasion will induce the owner to part with it at any price. Naturally the very fact of its being unprocurable makes it all the more desirable in the collector's eyes, and perhaps disappointment in this case is even keener than when the search results in finding and seeing nothing. But "hope springs eternal in the human breast," and surely especially so in that of the collector, so the next expedition is entered upon with renewed eagerness and the same expectancy of finding treasure as before. In addition to other experiences, the sad and pathetic, alas! befall collectors as other folk: often a thing is to be had only because stress of circumstances compels the parting with what has been a cherished possession. Such a thing has happened to the writer more than once, and the impulse always is to try and make it possible for the owners to keep their treasure rather than to buy it of them, but common sense then makes itself heard, suggesting that "if you con't, somebody else will," which is obvious.

Though a good many years have passed by since then, I can clearly recall every circumstance of what was actually my first experience in collecting. In my mind's eye I can see the little country town basking in the sleepy, self-satisfied complacency so characteristic of an English country town on all save

The Making of a Small Collection

$m \mathrm{~m}$ set days. In a small square window were displa ed one or two pieces of china, a brass warmingp. ' two or three old candlesticks (odd), and a few ou her things, the sight of which emboldened one to emer what otherwise appeared to be a private dwelling. Enquiry of the owner of this primitive shop elicited the fact that he had some old oak furniture, bet it was stored away in a loft, and he didn't in the least seem to anticipate its being in a more accessible place. Not to be baffled, I suggested paying a visit to the loft, to which proposal, after a moment's hesitation, he agreed with a chuckle. The chuckle was explained when I was introduced to the exceedingly ricketty latder by which alone the tumble-down old loft could be reached. However, ricketty and "straight up" as it was, my manner of negotiating that ladder compelled my friend to admiration, and once up, ardour was rewarded, for there, among all sorts of odds and ends, covered with cobwebs and thick with dust, stood a most beautiful old Jacobean chest. Closer inspection revealed rich moulding on the drawers, fine old handles and escutcheons, and quaint bulb feet; altogether its beauty and charms made one forget dirt and dust, the rubbish lying round, even the ricketty ladder. In response to my expressions of admiration, the owner remarked that "It was a nice old chest, a useful size, and strong "-this last seeming to be its greatest recommendation in his eyes. Then I learnt that it had come from a very old farmhouse in an adjacent village, the occupier of which died, leaving his womenfolk but puorly off, so though there was no regular sale, friends and acquaintances rallied round, buying things at prices asked. These must have been something less than modest, for I bought that chest for a sum that even in those days was moderate in the extreme, and of course my honest friend m.ele a little profit on what he gave for it.

1 very fine oak coffer in my possession was spied in the window of a pokey little shop in a west enntry town. At the expenditure of a shilling the he'p of a man in the street was obtained to get this dre.n for inspection, as the young woman keeping the shop couldn't move it. It proved to be an even finer specimen than I had thought. the front panels being grand examples of old English carving; indeed, so fine was it that I could not understand how it came to be where it was.

In reply to a question, the young woman called her mother, who, she said, could tell us all aboit it. Then the mystery was explained. The coffer originally came from an old manor-house in the county where this old woman had been in service before she married a man who held a farm on the estate. The old family died out, and there was a sale at the mansion, when for the sake of old memories the farmer bought the coffer with some other things for his wife. We gathered that when he died times were bad with his poor old wife, and she came to make a home with her daughter, whose hushand, being a dealer in a small way, sold for her what things she had left to part with. No doubt many of the really fine old things to 1 , found even now-a-days in out-of-the-way country places have had a somewhat similar history, could one but trace it. And that treasures are to be found goes without saying. Not so very long ago, for instance, I saw constantly in a small house, little more than a cottage in fact, in a country village, an absolutely genuine and untouched Cavalier dining-table with six of the old seats, re-christene. 1 "coffin-stools" by country folk, all pieces bearing the same date, 1637 , so far as memory serves me, in rude carving; hut this, alas! was one of the "unattainables."

To come to the pieces here illustraterl, the curinus oak cabinet, daterl $167+$-a genuine date, this, by the way. not che adilet ly an enterprising lealerwas found in a farmhuse, where it hall stowl in a lack kitrhe: for as long as anyone about the farm could remember, and prohably for several generations lack, the same family hasing held the farm for many, many years. It was used as a receptacle for kitchen tutensils and such things, the top heing bleached white from constant serubbing, and at one end was nailerl a deal rail wh which to hang dishcloths, etc.! Xeerless to say, this rail was thispensel with, though the mark of it still remains, wherwise the rabinet stamls eatireiy untowherl. Its chief charm is. I think, the quaint irregularity of design. As will be seen, the panels of the cuphoard all differ in size and the drawer is the colly "regular" thing about it. The old irm hinges adm much wh its beanty, hum of these is nom so fine as the wher five; evilentiy at some remote time the original broke, and local talent failed to produce a perfect cons.

l'erhaps even quainter still is the smaller piere of uak of whirh a sketch is givel on page 95 . This appears to consist of three shallow drawers on less. but in reality there is only one drawer, at the hootom, the upper part being a box, of which the "Ip forms the litl; this box fits on to the lower part, and can be removed. It was picked up in a village, in excellent comdition when one considers its age, for this is a very dol piere, omly a little hit of the straight moulding being gone. The feet, of course, are worn a gooul deal, but not sufficiently to necessitate restoration, so that practically it stands in its origrinal state. Experience, so far as mine goes at least, proves that it is most difficult to find genuine old chairs: in all my searchings and explorations I have come across comparatively few. The sketch shows one of three I have, which are. I think, rare in shape, the legs being particularly goond, while the backs are much higher than is usuai in these old beech chairs. 'Two have the original rush seats, but the thirl chair was so badly damased that it hat to be re-seated. All efforts to adit to their number have failet, and I fear me the set will never be marle up. Recently an arm-rhair was found which, though of oak and not beech, matched almust exactly sy far as the lack wem, though there. unfortunately, resemblance enclent, the legs and hars heing straisht. A sown set of Chippendale chairs, six upright and two arm, were fomm for me some years ago in the partour of a village Wacksmith, and from time to time I have picked up sarious others more or less quaint and a few very line ones. The small table illustrater in this pase is to my mimi very charming, and it is one of the few pieces of gemmine black oak I have seen: and here let me state my humble "plinion that there is no, such thins as black oak, saving that some wood becomes almost black from extrene age, whith is the case with this table. Rut this happens rarely, and then there is as much difference between it and the "black oak" offered in such profusion by some obliging dealers as between the colour of a well-groomed black brown horse and that of the harness he wears. In no wood does one see a greater variety of shades than in oak, but in genuine pieces there is surely none so seldom seen as black. Formerly to blacken oak was the plath usually adopted to conceal such trifling inaccuracies as new carsing, but now, if I mistake not, the oppor site extreme is also resorted to, and blaching in many cases lends an air of engaging genuineness to "faked" articles. The wonder to me is how purchasers (an le found for them.

the great disadvantages of the tabular form of statement is that a main factor in the determination of book values has to be left almost out of account: I mean the question of condition, and to what extent, if at all, the work be clefective. The notes as to this all-important question must be taken as no more than approximate indications; to enter exhaustive? here into this aspect of the matter is impossible.

An analysis of the table of $\dot{f} 100$ books shows that 18 came from the Hope-Edwardes library, 13 from the Pirovano, 5 from the Ellis, 3 from the Stanley, and 2 from the liraser-an order which conforms more or less to the importance of the several assemblages. The magnificent collection of earty printed books at the British Museum, it is of interest to say here, has been enriched by many examples from the Pirovano ljbrary, which contained dozens of books seldom sold at auction.

In the last column of the table mention is made of a few only out of many record prices. During the year 1901 , imleed, it would be difficult to ascertain how many books realised sums far in excess of any before pairl. To what cause is this remarkalole series of atvances attributable, it will be asked. The answer is not far to seek: we have the key to it in a single word-America. An astute dealer, Who learns from his confrercs the destination of many important works sold at auction, is of opinion that two-thirds of the high-priced lots which in 1901 rame umter the hammer, have gone, or will go, to America. The statement does not appear extravagant in view of the fact that Nos. $3,4,13,17,39$, 40 , and 59 on our table are known either to have been bought by American agents, or already to have found their way across the Atlantic. We can part without regret, perhaps, with the $£_{\mathrm{r}, 475}$ " lilgrim's Progress," but that the two Shakespeare quartos should go to join all too many First Folios in America is a matter for some concern. Had it not been for the eager competition of trans-Atlantic buyers, the nine sales specified at the beginning of this article would have realised nothing like the $\mathcal{E} 80,000$ odd actually obtained. We in the old country have treasure, and to spare; but home collectors should take heed lest an over-large proportion of fine and rare books is shipped from our shores. An informative volume might be written as to the literary and bibliographical importance of certain of the 63 works specified on the table; but the brief notes must in this place suffice.

As all book lovers will agree, to analyse the atctions of any year exclusively from the point of view of a $£ 100$ minimum would be as ridiculous as to attempt to demonstrate the structural signifi cance of a mountain range and of a spiders web with the aid only of a surveyor's chain. As a fact, a hardl. less interesting survey might be undertaken from the opposite point of view-that, say, of a $£_{j}$ maximum. The table which follows enumerates 35 important works, each of which brought a con siderable sum, printed during the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries.

(1) Slightly defective. (7) Sold with all faults.

No. 2 is one of the few important pieces ; Americana sold during the year, but the copy dot not compare with that in Lord Ashburton's librar!
pa: culariy rich in early pieces of the kind, which in 900 brought $£ 240$, the previous recorded examp having made $1 \frac{1}{2}$ gs. No. 3, from the library oi Robert Pitcairn, is very scarce, if not actually: mulue. No. 5, according to the catalogue, is the if st of four known examples of as many seven1. nith century editions. No. 8, a single sheet of e sht pages, is again extraordinarily scarce. No. $i_{3}$ is from the Roxburghe library, 1812, when it made $\dot{2} 35_{5}^{5}$ Examples of Nos. 12 and 17 were in the Turner library, bringing in 1888 respectively £ 11 and £ 31 . No. 16 , now in the British Museum, is one of the most famous books from the Venetian press of Gregorius de Gregoriis and his brother John; its large wood-cuts show a dissection, a consultation of physicians, and a plaguestricken man in bed. No. 19 is the first quarto edition in which the play is divided into acts and stenes. Eizevir books are out of vogue, or No. 20, entirely uncut, would have realised much more.人o. 24 , in the original wrappers, uncut, contains the first appearance of "The Grandam," said by Hazlitt to be Charles Lamb's first printed piece, as, too, an original sonnet by Colerislge. Nos. 25 -Hibbert's copy of which made $£^{6}$ in 1829 -and 33, will shortly be available for students at the liritish Museum, whose authorities do not countenance the suggestion that Milton wrote the "School Lawes" tract. No. 28 was sent to Messrs. Horlgsons' with a reserve of something like $£ 2$. It is probably the first occurrence at auction of an entirely uncut copy-the measurements are 81 ins. ly $5 \neq$ ins. -and $£ 5^{\circ}$ is a record price, albeit "The Dunciad," an invective published fourteen years later, bearing the autograph of Jonathan Richarison, marle $£ 75$ on May 8 th, 1900 .

We have but just parted company with an old friend-the nineteenth century-that intangible entity from whom it requires an effort of the imagination to detach ourselves, for few of us are as yet efuntionally convinced that we now belong to his successor, the twentieth century. Hence, books ariginally published in the hundred years beginning with 1800 possess a more instant appeal for many tian monuments, however great, of the birth-time - printing. For the most part, the authors whose $\therefore$ mes appear in the following table are familiar 1. every cultivated person. To read Scott, i hackeray, and Dickens in first edition is a pleasure nied to many, so far, at any rate, as the earlier 1 rarer of their novels are concerned; and so $i$ is with the Poems of Shelley, Keats, Byron, and U, rilsworth; as, too, with the Fssays of Charles

Lamb. The list makes no pretence to be exhaus tive; on the other hand, I have aimed to include works which do not come within the $£ 100$ minimum, but are yet worthy of mention.

A few details of the foregoing books may be of interest. In looking at the realised prices, the fact that some of the looks, as indicaterl, were presentation copies, and bore autograph inscriptions ly the respective authors, should be taken into account. When due allowance for this be marle, however, several of the sums pail are extraordinarily high. The two pieces in Ko. i were bound in a single volume, protected by a green moroceo bincling. Editioncs principes of both series, without halftitles, brought $£ 18$ ros. in May, 1900 . The Cowe copy, June, 1892, of No. 2, in original wrap. per, uncut, brought the record price of $£ 86$, against an issue value of 3 s. Nus. 3,10 , and ${ }_{13}$, published respectively at about £1 is., $1+\mathrm{s}$., and 1fs., almoss certainly register high-water marks as to prices. Scotts original manuscript of No. 3 was sold by Evans, August 19 th, 183 1, for $£^{27}$ ios. No. 10, in original boards, uncut, and No. 13 , in similar state, bore inscriptions probably in Wordsworth's autograph. No. 4 was a fine, clean copy, original boards, uncut, with label on back, some of the sheets not even cut open at the top. P'ublished at 5 s., the Hibbert cops, 8829 , made us., while that sold in March was, within a few weeks, bought for America. Of the Stevensonian trifle, No. s, again bought for America, copies sold later in the year for $£ 24$ 5s., $£ 27$ 1os., and $£ 24$. No. 6 is interesting as being the novelists own copy, with his stamperl monagram on the title. Si. i, "Temyson" on title, was pullisherl at 7 s ., and in June, 1898, an uncut example in morocen extra made $£ 31$. As representing many art reference looks that are rising in value, No. 8, pul) lished at $£ 1118 \mathrm{~s}$, may be citerl. Xo. 11 , published at ges, was a particularly tine copy, many leaves mot having been cut open. It will be recalled that Stiths brought a "remainder" of No. 12 for fll. a Crs: the inscription, "Mrs. Reynolls, from her friem J. R.," was probably now in the peet's auto. waph. In a like table for 1900 we should have hat to include litizgerathis "Omar," which, once in the end lwa no longer to be fouml at 15 , liceradilly, made $£ 35$. Now we particularise two of many rare pieces by litageralil sold cluring the year. So. 14, Entended for the lickering "Calderom" of 1853. was never publisheal; of No. 16 few roppies are known. Xio. 1.5 came from blackmores own l.hrary, but his name had been cut off the fly-leaf. Shortly after his death last year an example brought £37. No. 18, the pre-kaphaelite journal, was discontimued after the issue of the fourth number. No. 19, "E. Cookson from William Worlsworth," a piere of but four leaves, was possibly printed in the provinces about 1835 . No. 20 is one of the very few noteworthy lots of the year associated with Charles Dickens, but were the William Wright collection to be disperset now instead of, as it was, in 1899, still more amazing prices for rare Dickensiana would probably be oltained. Xo. 21 is one of the ridiculously high prices of the season. Brarlshaw enjoyed but a brief vogue, ropies selling later for about £5. The value set on No. 24 was by reason of the fact that it was Ruskin's copy, with MS. criticisms, ete., by him. No. 26 was in original black cloth, not in eight separate parts as issued at a total cost of half a guinea. No. ${ }^{27}$, in original cloth, uncut, is an exceptionally high price, even allowing for the inscription, "To Mr. Fred Jurton, with high regards from George Eliut."

Of perhaps a hundred items that come within the scope of the following table, I make a selection of fourteen only.

No. 1 was the highest-priced lot in the Ellis library, fetching aloout seven times as much as the late woner paisl for it when he acquired it from descemlants of lirwarr Catvert, to whom the set was given by Blake. Nos. $3,7,7,9,11$, and 14 wer. extensively extra-illusiraterl, with portraits, aut. sraph letters, and the like. No. II made £ 40 : George Daniels' sale, 1864 . No. 4 comprised 1$]$. two suitcs, l'aris, 1774-7, now, apparently, for th: first time offered for sale. In 1898 a copy • Series II. alone marle $£ 62$. No. 12 at Skerg sale, $18+2$, made $£ 17$ 1os.; after further addition. it fetcherl $£ 99$ at the Baurlinel, 861 . No. 6 is or: of many sporting publications, now much in deman'.

Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 7 on the followii.f table were the six MSS. from this collection which brought sums in excess of $\mathcal{E}$,, 000 . A propos of So. 6, it may be said that the Bramball copy of the Wycliffe Bible in the Ashburnham "Appentix," with 404 ff . instead of but 269 ll ., as that solli on May 12 th, realised $£ 1,750$. No. 8 was once in the Ashburnham collection.

interest from the fact that the autographs were sold by order of the executor of the late Dr. A. de Sise Walker, who inherited them from his grandmother, Mrs. Riddel, of Glen Kildel, the friend and admirer of Burns, and the "Maria" addressed b, "Esopus." No. 2, a folio containing in addition designs by R. Bentley for six Gray poems, fetched $£ 30$ at Daniels' sale, 1864. The William Pemn MSS. belonged to Lady Sudeley, who inherited them from her uncle, to whom in turn they had been hequeathed by Mr. Granville l'enn, greatgrandson oi the founcler of Pennsyltania. At a sale held by Evans in 1831 the fragment of "Ivan-prising $5^{8}$ leaves, with $1+$ leaves of the opening rhapter of "Waverley," and some cantos in Scott's autograph, brought $£ 215$ in June, 1894. As much of "lvanhoe" was dirtated to an amanuensis, possibly these are the only two frasments extant. No. 5 was publisherl, but not written, while Moore lived at Lalla Rookh Cottare, Muswell Hill. Promiter,

L  By Mrs. F. NETH. Jackson

IT was during the serenteenth century that hand-made lace was at the most elatorate and beautiful stage of its development, and as, on account of its fragility, the history of lace is largely dependent on picturial art for auhentic evidence, rather than on actual specimens, few of which survive the wear and tear of centuries, the portraits painterl by Vandyke are most valuable records of the varieties of needle-poim and bubbin laces known at this periow, and also of the morle of the moment in wearing them.

Though forms of openwork ornamentation, such as cut work and nething, were known in very early times, and the rule mending of a fraved eilge with interlacing threarls has been considerel as lace in embry, the history of lace in the sense of the worl in which we now use it legins with the sixteenth cellury, though in an inventory of the property of a member of the Sforza Viomti family, of Milan, are emmeraten seteral special makes and designs at the end of the fifteenth century.

In the pictures of Carpaccios in the Belles Artes Gallery at Venice "passements," the galloms "r gold lares of the present day, are seen. It is this mariety of rich trimming, so neariy allied w lace. that is so profusely shown both in the portrait of latala Allorno Marchesa Brignole-Sale ly Vanlyke, which is now in the l'alazzo Rossongallery at Genom, and in the second portrait of the Marchesa in the collertion of the Duke of Abercorn. Thirteen rows of the costly crnamem form a rohing and eige the under-liress. The large neck and sleeve ruffs are ornamented with the flax thread "purlings" characteristic of the perionl. These were somewhat lonsely-twisted threals resembling the torchon lace of the present day, and were largely made by the peasants all over Europe.

In Fngland this early variety was very generally called "bone" lace, on arcount of the threarls being wound on the dried bromes of small animals before the more monlern toblins were in general use: it is likely also that "bone" had some connection with the small splinters of bone in use at the perionl instead of pins, which, though invented in the previsus century, were still too cost'y to be used by the working classes.
"Twenty-five yards of fyne bone lace" appears

as an item in a wardrobe account of the day, that amount leing required for the elging of a ruff. wis haracteristic detail the delicate guipures and lar lged ruffs of the sixteenth century, but it w ior Anthony Vandyke to show in those magmi: ent portraits, which are still the delight of the comisseur and the despair of the molern attist, th. true value of lace as an accessory of dress in piturial art.

There is a sulttle charm in fine hand-made lace

LRNESTO PRINCIPIET COMITI MANSFELDIAEMARCHIONI CASTELLI-NOVI ET BVTIGLIRLE, BARONI AB HELDRVNGEN, GENERALI ETC.

To Vandyke's relined and artistic sense the glitter of diamonds, rubies, and emeralds, beautiful though they be, would have been offensive ; but lace, in its comparatively quiet richness, never oltrudes itself-its true worth is only recognised by those whose taste has been trained to see its restrained value.
To the Italian influence at the end of the sixteenth century was due the fashion which ohtained throughout Europe of wearing ruffs decorated with the Reticella or germetric point lace; for the glory of Venice, Genoa, and l'adua had not yet been usurped by Paris in setting the fashions; and we are thankful that Vandyke's porraits-being painted during a transition in the mocles--show examples louth of the ruffs and cols rabbutus, or falling lare collars for the men, and upstanding Medici collars, lesides the flat, deep lace corsage trimming of the women, and remain to us as examples of the beauty and grace, even in extravagant monles, when treatel by a master hand.

In several of Vandyke's prortraits, that of Rulvens's wife in particular (sec pagi 111). it will be seen that the ruffle fashion survivel at the wrist some years after the wearing of the nerk ruff had been discomtinuel, the monle being far (ox) beroming to be lighty relinquisheal.

As long as Marie de Medici lived, the upsanding collar, which still bears her name, worn either chose $w$ the back of the nerk or in the more graceful manner erlging the daoltage, as in the portrait of Queen Hemrietta Maria and of Helena Firman, was used with its ellging of fine gupure lace. An interesting monlification in the make of this lace is noticeable when the extravagance of the ruff hating disguster the exquisites of the European Courts, the falling lace or cambric collars with deep sralloperl horiler of point, twigether with outside sleeve lecoration or manchictes a rovers, were worn. The (iuipure, chiefly made at Genoa, which is so frequently represented in Vandyke's portraits, was ustally worked in geometric designs, the heavy portion of the pattern in bobbin-made tape being unitert ant the openings filled with ornamental stitches; these stitches, on the introbluction of the fashion of the falling collar. became hewier and more emphasised, a kind of P'oint desprit, of grainshaped enrichment, being added on account of the desirability of weight in the lace, so that it should hang down gracefully (as is shown so well in the portrait of Françuis, l'rince of Savoy Carignan, painted in 1634) rather than stand out as for the elging of a ruff, which hati hitherto required lightness and delicacy rather than weight.

It must not be imagined that all Genoa point was mate in Italy, In order to supply the emormous demand, Guipure or tape lace of this description was made at most of the European lace districts of the period, with the exception only of those of Belgium, where the characteristic lace of Flanders, with its close workmanship and exquisite fineness of thread, so suitable for bobbin work, was mainly produced.
The Guipure of the seventeenth century was an extremely ornamental and artistic production, and should on mo account be confounded with the modern Guipure, for the word is frequently misapplied to modern Honiton and Maltese laces and their Buckingham imitations, or to the corarse raised points of Venice. The Guipure d'Art of the nineteenth century, or Filet Guipure, is the morlern survival of the Opus Filiatorium or Darned Netting, one of the earliest type of openwork ornamentation. Genoa laces have been celebrated from the earliest times (the gold and silver laces of Cyprus being first reproduced there about the beginning of the fifteenth century). The same designs were also made in silk, as we see in Vandyke's full-length " Portrait," where quantities of this silk lace or guipure, " parchment" lace as it was called in England, forms the rich trimming of the whole costume.

Gold, silver, and silk laces trimmed all the cavalier dresses, and such trimming was used also on the liveries of lacqueys and servants; in women's dress also it played an important part, and has helperd, with the more elaborate, though less showy, flax thread lace, in emphasising the "Vandyke" form of all trimmings, this name having been given to the pointed scallop shape by a generation which has become familiar with it through Vandyke's pictures.

Points de Gênes are mentioned amongst the effects of Marie de Medici, but it was not until the seventeenth century that the beautiful flax thread laces of Genoa were of European celebrity.

The transition from the gold and silver to the flax thread shows an interesting page in the legslation of the time. It is to the stringency of the Sumptuary laws that we owe the exquisite fl $x$ thread lace, for when the costlier material was fir. bidden the lace workers substituted for gold anil silver thread the homelier flax, and from the moment when the increased facility in working was felt, and the added grace and beauty of flexibility was seen in the flax thread lace, it was realised that the less costly material would lend itself to designs of such intricacy and beauty as had never been thought of in comnection with the metal threads.

In Vandlyes time it was the bobbin lace. a piombini, that is, made with iron-weighted boblins to increase the tension of the thread, that was an highly valued. Needle-point, as well as bobbin laciwere made in Genoa; both "piece" lace and la e edgings by the yard; knotted laces resembling : e monlern macrami were also produced.

We are not aware that any example of this latir variety is shown in a picture by Vandyke, but te contemporary engravings of Ahraham Bosse all

l)uring the early half of the century now closed every lady had a cameo brooch or several of them; ear-rings also, bracelets, studs, and other ornaments were formed of cameos set in golld or silver. Ladies of station and means wore cameos which were veritable gems of workmanship and artistic treatment, set in fine gold, wrought with the best of the goldsmiths' art; their humbler sisters added to their toilets cameos of a coarser kind set in silver or gilt metal.

The resistless changes of fashion have swept away the Indian shawls and Paishy shawls which our grandmothers and mothers wore, and with the shawls the cameo brooch has also passed. It is not so very long since the windows of jewellers' shops were gay with mounted cameos, and very beautiful and attractive they were. This change of fashion is the opportunity of the cameo collector, because people are not going to keep old jewellery laid by at home for ever; and so it happens that the cameo brooches are taken to the jeweller, the gold mounting is turned into hard cash, and the cameo, no longer prized, is tossed aside, and probably left with the jeweller to do with as be likes.
The collector of unmounted cameos finds his best collecting grounds among dealers in old juwellery, among those tradesmen who break up jewellery, and among jewellers generally. Sometimes it happens that one may come on a manufacturing jeweller who, in the good old days, imported fine camcos from Italy, so that his customers might have ample choice ; but times changed, and now these lovely works of art can be had for as many shillings as they once cost pounds. They are in absolutely fresh and perfect condition, just as they left the artist's hands. This is an important matter, for many of the camcos one mects with are much worn by the many cleanings and washings they have had during their career as ornaments. Shell is a soft material, and sculpture upon it soon loses its sharpness under the action of repeated cleanings. Some girls have the good sense to get hold of their mothers' old cameos and to get them mounted as beit-clasps: and very pretty and suitable they look.
It is supposed that shell cameos were made in ancient times, and specimens which are said to be of sixteenth century work are to be found in some colluctions. It must be a difficult matter to distinguish: these earlier examples from some of the work of modern times: their worn condition would not be a sufficient guide or test, as very recent cameos are often found to be much worn owing to the effect of the clamings just referred to.

COllecting Sheil, CameosBY WILLIAM HUGH PATTERSON

The art of cutting cameos on sea-shells has been for many years practised in the Italian citics, especially in Naples, Rome, and Florence. A colony of cameo-cutters established themselves in Paris, while some work in this way

HIGH REL.IEF White AND HROWN SHELL has been done in London, and also in the United States. From the period of the French Revolution down to thirty or forty years ago, the demand for cameos was very constant, and must have given employment to hundreds of workmenperhaps, I might say, artists.
During the early half of the century now closed every lady had a cameo brooch or several of them; ear-rings also, bracelets, studs, and other ornaments were formed of cameos set in gold or silver. Ladies of station and means wore cameos which were veritable gems of workmanship and artistic treatment, set in fine gold, wrought with the best of the goldsmiths' art; their humbler sisters added to their toilets cameos of a coarser kind set in silver or gilt metal.

The resistless changes of fashion have swept away the Indian shawls and Paisley shawls which our grandmothers and mothers wore, and with the shawls the cameo brooch has also passed. It is not so very long since the windows of jewellers' shops were gay with mounted cameos, and very beautiful and attractive they were. This change of fashion is the opportunity of the cameo collector, because people are not going to keep old jewellery laid by at home for ever; and so it happens that the cameo brooches are taken to the jeweller, the gold mounting is turned into hard cash, and the cameo, no longer prized, is tossed aside, and probably left with the jeweller to do with as he likes.

The collector of unmounted cameos finds his best collecting grounds among dealers in old jewellery, among those tradesmen who break up jewellery, and

Sometime; it happens that one may come on a manufacturing jeweller who, in the good old days, imported fine cameos from Italy, so that his customers might have ample choice ; but times changed, and now these lovely works of art can be had for as many shillings as they once cost pounds. the Queen's Conch, strombus gigas; while other sea-shells have been occasionally used. The substance of these shells consists of two layers, sometimes more, of different colours, and it is this peculiarity that makes these shells particularly suitable for cameos. The design is formed in the white layer, which is cut away all round the design until the dark background is laid bare, and then all detail work, finishing touches, and polishing are added. In this way a fine, strong effect is easily produced. The under layer, or background, is of a reddish, orange colour, in the Bull Mouth shell, while the upper layer has a warm, white tone. In the Helmet shell the background varies from a rich brown colour to a cool grey, and the upper layer is a pure white; while in the Conch shell pink is found tinting both layers.

One great charm about a collection of cameos is that each one is a separate and independent work of art-in fact, a miniature piece of sculpture, worked from iirst to last by human hands, guided by human intelligence. In this way cameos are more interesting than coins or medals, which may he struck from dies in large numbers, each one alike; or engravings, which are multiplied by inking metal phates and pressing them on paper.

The earliest cameos of which we know anything were cut on hard stone, such as onyx, sardonyx, agate, all of which have layers of different colours and shades; great numbers of these still exist, and are of wonderfui beauty, both as regards workinanship and colour. The art of cutting stone cameos is well understood, and is still practised, the favourite stones being onys, in which the design shows white upon a grey or black ground, and sardonys, in which the ground is red.

It was probably in the search for a more abundant material than stones of the agate class that shells came to be used for camcos; they afforded the needful layers of distinct colours, and while having a certain amount of hardness were very much more easily cut than stone. Consequently, when the art of cutting shell camoos was fairly started, the numbers produced became very large, and persons of moderate means were able to acquire them.

It might have been supposed that some continuity of design would have been found in ancient gems and modern cameos, but I do not find that this is the case to any great extent. Most of the desizns or subjects on shell cameos ane classical in character, as indeed might have been expected, considering the traditions and surroundings of the Italian artists who designed and cut them ; but athough in shell cancos much of the feeling is classical, yet the treatment has been modifice to suit popular taste and is more free and less

HEAD OF MEDUSA WhITE ANH ORANGE SHELI. severe than in the ancient stone cameos or intaglios which have come down to us.

In examining a collection of cameos, what perhaps strikes one most is the great varicty in the subjects which have been used by the artists who design the cameos. At the same time there is a good deal of repetition. This is only to be expected, as certain subjects became farourites and were constantly asked for.

As to subjects, it will be found that classial female heads in profile are the most abundant; these vary very much one from another; some are probatly taken from the subjects on ancient gemb, while others are doubtess copies of heads in the Italian sculpture galleries, and represent the gosidesses and nymphs of the Greek mythology. The well-known hcads of Juno, Venus, Mcdusa, and Minerva are repeated over and over again, whik: a still greater number of the heads are probably intended for lacchantes and various nymphs. Many of these heads have most beautifully carved vine feates and bunches of grapes clustering in and about ftetrek ANO juNO WHATE ANO KED SHELI. the hair. Male heads are by no means so common: they generally represent men or gods crowned with laurd and bearded. Some are probably intended for Jupiter. The head of Mercury is casily recognised, and is a favourite with the cameocutters; and the same may be said of the heads of Neptune and Apoilo.

Frequentlytwoprofiles, male and female, appear on the same cameos, one superimposed upon the other. A sulject which the collector frepuently meets with is that of a girl giving food or drink to an cagle: Hebe and the bird of Jove are probably intended. A curious thing about this subject is the mumber of different ways in which the two figures aie grouped and treated, but the food vessel is always a flattened vase or bowl. Three dancing nymphs, probably the (iraces, are frequently met with; this was a very favourite subject. The figures are shown dancing under a wasing canopy of drapery; sometimes when the piece of shell is large enough a group of spectators occupies one end of the camco. Victory driving a chariot; Cupid riding a lion; Cupidand Psyche; St. George and the dr: on : and Thorwaldsen's "Night" and "Morning," ar all favourite subjects often repeated. Another pretty subject one often sees is the group of four pi- ons resting on a vase, called "Pling's Doves." Sule of the designs represent battle seenes, hunting scomes, and military pageants, and contain numerous fueres of men, women, and horses. Famous grueps of statuary are copied, and also well-known pictures, such as some of Raphacl's Madonnas.

There are many religious subjects, such as might be favourites in Italy, and also many domestic or rural subjects, in which a pair of lovers, or a cottage with a girl and a goat or lamb, make up the picture. I should mention the cameos cut in high relief, in which full faces can 1 e managed; of course, it will be understuod that for this purpose a piece of shell with an extra thick white layer musi be selected, so that the work will stand up high above the background. These are not nearly so common as cameos in the ordinary low relief, and usually bar only one head on each.

Many portrait cameos have been cut, hut they are not very

JORTRATT HEAN IN Htwill RBidFE: WHITE AND bROWN sheil commonly met with. Well-known heads, such as those of Rembrandt, Mary Queen of Scots, etc., are sometimes seen. Portraits of living people have been cut in Italy, Iondon, and the provinces, down to very late times, by Italians or by persons who have studied the art under natives of Italy.

In purchasing camens for a collection, it will be well to select those only that are in good condition ; sonctimes the background is partly broken away or badly cracked, and sometimes the design is much worn, but defects such as these must be owerlooked if the cameo is especially curious or interesting.

Posy RINCS liy R. H. ERNEST HILI.
The Collector of Finger-Rings who is not possessed of ample funds, is almost obliged to conline his attention to one particular class of rings and specialise in one direction, so many are the various kinds which chaim consideration. It is not probably within the power of the average collector to get together such fine and complete serics of rings as those formed by the late Sir A. W. Franks and others, now in the British Museum and at South Kensingtom, and it is therefore more satisfactory to take up one branch of the subject with a fair chance of making a good and representative collection within the prescribed limits. losy rings may not perhaps offer a very wide field, but they certainly form a very attractive one, and possess a good deal of romantic association and interest.
lascrithed rings have been used from the earliest times ; the ancient Egyptians were apparently the first to adopt them, but the inseriptions were cut on stones set in the rings after the fashion of signets, and not engraved in the metal of the ring itself, like those we are considering. In Gireck and Roman times we sometimes meet with examples more nearly corresponding to posy rings. The motto was generally ZESEA, or XAIPE, and occasionally a lady's name was included, as VOTIS MEIS CLAVIDA VIVAS, and AEMDIIA ZESES, found on a Komano-British ring at Corbridge some gears ago. These examples are, however, very rarc, and not ensy to pick up.

Nis. I.

In medieval times rings were often inscribed with cabalistic and magic words, such as "anam zapta," and the names of the three magi, frequently combined with expressions of a religious character. Of this kind the following (late fifteenth century) is a good instance: it was a gold ring enamelled on the outside in white, with a figure of the Passion and five crosses, under which were the words in Gothic lettering: "The well of pitty.-The well of merci.-The well of comforte.-The well of grace.-The well of everlastingh lyffe." Inside was inscribed: "+ Vulnera quing dei sunt medicina mei pia crux et passio xpi sunt medicina michi. Jaspar. Melchior. Baltasar anamzapta tetragrammaton."

Another curious sentiment found on a gold ring with five bosses was "VT • COIA • CVTE P PACE - DO." "I make peace to save my skin."

These do not, however, strictly speaking come under the head of Posy Rings, that is, with a "poesie" or rhyme inscribed on them; and we do not find the name used earlier than the sisteenth century. Shakespeare's allusion is well known, in the "Merchant of Venice," Act v. Scene 1 , where Gratiano makes reference to-
" A hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give me ; whose posy was For all the world like cutler's poctry Lpon a knife. Love me and leave me not."
Although most examples date from the sixteath to the cighteenth centuries, many have been found of an carlier period, and these are usually inscribed either in Norman-French or Latin. The following are good instances: (No. i.) A gold ring found at Whitchurch in Salop, having on the outside the words "En bone foy" divided by ieaftet ornaments. (No. ii.) Another ring with chased sersll-ornaments on the outside, and inside "TIME IEVM ME AMA Q(I) ${ }_{\text {IE }}^{R}$ :" A gold ring found on Flodden Fictd had this posy-

OV EST NVL, SI I OIAVIS AMANS QVI SE POE'T GARDER I)ES MAVX DISANS.

Chaucer's description of the Prioress in the "Canterbury Tales" is recalled by the moto AMOR VINCIT OM(NIA) on a silver ring found near Old Sarum.

An ancient gold ring with thirteen facets had this inscription in old French- $\mathrm{IO} \cdot \mathrm{SV} \cdot \mathrm{I} \cdot \mathrm{S} \cdot \mathrm{l}$; $\cdot \mathrm{N}$ - $\mathrm{H} \cdot \mathrm{DE} \cdot \mathrm{AM} \cdot \mathrm{IS} \cdot \mathrm{T} \cdot \mathrm{E} \cdot \mathrm{A}$; that is, " Je suis signe de amitie A." An carly fifteentl century example in the South Kensington Museum has " lensey deli Parkissici."-" l'ense\% de lui par qui je suis ici." A motto or posy which is not uncernmon is "Quant dieu plera melior sera," also occurring as "CAN INV PLERA MELEOR SERA." The inscription on a ring found at Southwell was-

Occasionally a specimen has more than one inscription on it ; as, for instance, a fine massive ing of gold in the collection at South Kensington, which is inseribed on the outside OBSERVE WEDHOKE and inside MEMENTO MORI. This is of sixteenth century date. (No. iii.)
sometimes fine examples are found of compound posy rings, such as one which consisted of eight rangs one within the other, with these verses, hall a line on nach ring-

So. III

* Ryches be unstable

And icuty wyll dekay
But faithfull love wyll ever last Till reath dryve it away."
Of a similar kind, though later in date, was the rim of five links presented to Jady Katherine Grey by Edward Seymour, who hi nself composed the posy on it-

- As circles five by art compact show but one King in sight
So trust uniteth faithfull mindes with knot of secret might $\therefore$ IV.

Whose force to breake but greedie Neath no wight possesseth power $\therefore$ times and sequels well shall prove. My king can say no more."

The ring illastrated in No. $v$. is not unlike a compound one. It has wo gold hoops rivetted together so as to open into a globular shape, for what purpose is not very evident, unless it was intended for a pendant ornament as well as a finger ring. Outside are the words-
"r. HATH TIDE. 2. MEE SVRE. 3 . WHILST IIFE. 4. DOTH I.AST."

Inside-
"ACCEPT THIS GIFT OF HONEST I.OVE WHICH NEVER COVID NOR CAN REMOVE."

Of other ormamental varieties, the following illustrations give some idea. They are, of course, unusual, especially that shown in No. iv., but this paper would not be complete without mentioning the more decorative examples, especially as later ones (being meant for use as wedding rings) are nearly aboy's quite plain. The silver ring set with bluish-coloured opaque rounded stones is a fine specimen and of uncommon design. It is of the seventecnth century, and has the words "I.E'1 IIKING I.AST" inside. The illustration was drawn from the original at South Kensington. (No. iv.)

The next is planer, but has been prettily enamelled outside in red, green and white. The posy inside is "As true to thee as death to me," in kettering resembling ordinary hand writing. (No. vi.)

A device often seen occurs in the next illustration of a ring from Sir A. W. Frank's collection. Two clasped right hands with cuffs, issuing from fiveleaved fowers, support a heart between the joined fingers. Inside, on the plain part of the hoop, is the posy: " DEEE TRVE IA HEART THO FARK APART:" (No. vii.) This and the last example are both of seventeenth century date.

In the South Kensington Museum is a lady's ring with a small writing diamond set in a very slender hoop, with the words, "This sparke will grow," referring, perhaps, to the spark of love which was to grow in the lover's heart.

No. VI.
With regard to the plain examples of posy rings, more especially those of later date, their chief interest lies, of course, in the posies engraved on them. Iarge collections of posies have been published at various times from the eighteenth century downwards; and if only half of them were actually used on rings, there would be a very large number for the collector to add to his cabinct. The same posy, however, is often found used several times on as many rings, and it is probable that only a limited number of popular examples were really in use at any period. It would be a highly interesting and amusing hobby for a collector who was amply provided with the necessary means, to collect specimens all bearing different posies, with the object of seeing how many he couid get without duplication.

A curious method of writing posies where the available space was very limited, must not be overlooked. A small figure was often used instead of a word, and sometimes only the initials were inscribed on the ring. Instances are-

which is meant to be read as-
*When heart and hand do give consent There live and love and rest content."
Another one is-
"The 家 did find ye $\varnothing$ did chuse
The 5 doth bind till death doth lonse."

Latin posies are occasionally met with in the later period, but are not so common as English. The wedding-ring of the wife of Dr. George Bull, Bishop of St. David's, 1658 , had on it-

BENE PARERE PARERE PARARE IMEH MIHI IEV

CONIVGII FIRMI ET CASTI SV:I PIGNUS AMORIS.

Posies often express some religious sentiment, and the following are fair examples of this kind-
"Knit in one by Xit alone."
"God $y^{}$ hath kept thy heart for mee Girant $y^{}$ our love may fathful bee."
"God our love continue ever That we in heaven may live together."
"First fear $y^{c}$ I ord and rest content So shall wee live and not repent."
"First love Nt that died for thee Next to Him love none but mee."

Sometimes a sentence is found which dous not profess to be in rhyme, but in that case it ousht strictly speaking not to be called a posy at all. Such are-
"I am sent to salute you from a faithful friend."
" Desire hath no rest."
"This and my heart."
"Acceptance is m y comfortc."

Examples of different posies might be multipliet to a large extent, but that is not the purpose of this paper ; and something must be said on the cataloguing and classifying of specimens. This may be done acurding (a) to chronological order; (b) different languages, such as English, French and Latin; or (c) the nature of the sentiments or forms of the posies. The most satisfactory method, in the writer's opinion, is the chronological one, as it is most likely to give the collector the best grasp of the subject.
As rewards ascertaining the date of a ring; where this is not actually known, the form of the lettering wilt give a fairly good indication of the century to which it may be assigned. Thus, Gothic lettering (as in No. i.) was in use cown to the beginning of the sixteenth century, after which Roman eapitals came into fashion. In the latter part of the seventeenth century and later, a "script" in imitation of hand-writing was frequently employed; but these are, after all, only roughly correct.

With reference to prices, they have of course risen of late years, so that the collector is not likely to pick up many "hargains." This is the case nowadays with most objects of art, and losy Rings are no exception.

In conclusion, the writer camot help regretting that this pretty and romantic way of using rings is so largely a thing of the past. Its revival is much to be wished for on sentimental and artistic grounds; it would also henefit the collector by providing modern examples to be added to his collection. Moreover, it might have the desirable effect of banishing the hideous " Alizpah" motto, once and for all, from its place on finger-rings, especially as the word is used in direct contradiction to its original meaning, and cannot for a moment hear comparison with the quaintly-expressed sentiments of love and friendship once so popular on old English Posy Rings.

A  mysteriols cenacolo  by M. MONTGOMERY-CAMIDBEIt,

Fresh fears are entertained in regard to the preservation of what yet remains of the world $f$ med Cenacolo, by Leonardo da Vinci, in the - Cectory of the old convent of Santa Maria delle Cirazie at Milan. Those to whom it has been a lifitong friend, and who have visited and re-visited it again and again, mark the ravages of time with trubled hearts. The state of the plaster on the " ills renders the question of saving what yet remains of this treasure from decay one of exceeding difficulty. This regrettable circumstance may perhaps conduce to attracting fresh pilgrims to a spot in the wild hill country-Italian in character, though under Swiss rule-where the village of Ponte Capriasca lies hid. It is situated about six miles from Iugano, thence it can be reached by carriage, or still better on foot; also it is accessible from the station of Taverne, on the St. Gothardt railway, whence a walk of a mike and a half across the mountains brings one to the church.

One enters the sacred building followed by the usual rabble of children, reinforced by a fuw idlers, eager to know why the forestieri have sought out this secluded locality. looking round the church there is little to attract attention beyond the Cenacolo adoming the walls of the left transept. Is it a dream? Can one be at Milan once more, and the walk through glorious seenery, the views, the endless flowers on the way, be the mere creation of a tired fancy? Here before one are the eager, questioning disciples, the sublime central Figure, the expressive hands, the background glimpses of distant scenes, the marvellous grouping, all speaking of a master's touch. It is the same, and yet not

One feels at first inclined to exclaim, "None but $\mathrm{D}_{\mathrm{a}}$ Vinci could have painted this!"-and thin one hesitates. The origin of this fascinating Cenacolo is wrapped in mystery. Some people dismiss it as "of the School of Lconardo," but they seem to be in a minority; and it is stated confidently that those painters who have from time to time been instructed to re-touch Da Vinci's great picture have first sought inspiration and guidance by journeying to Ponte Capriasca.

The following theories have also been propounded in regard to the Capriascan Cenacolo: Firstly, that it was painted by the master himself, as his first conception of his great subject ; secondly, that it is the same, and is in a far greater degree of preservation than the familiar picture in the erstwhile conrent. Also it has been evidently re-touched, and badly. The rich colouring of the garments has been retained, but there are signs of a heavier hand here and there, which mar in some degree the original delicacy of the work, notably in the painting of the hair on the heads of the disciples. Moreover, the scenes in the background are different, representing the Sacrifice of Isaac and the Agony in the Garden, whereas I.conardo's picture gives glimpses of peaceful views of Jerusalem, The panelling of the Upper Room and several small matters of detail also differ from those of the Milanese picture.

a replica of the Milanese picture; thirdly, that it is the work of Bernardino Luini, whose genius gave to the otherwise plain church of Santa Maria derfi Angioli, at I.ugano, the most wonderful representation of the Passion the world has ever known; fourthly, there is a legend that a poor artist, driven from his home by the troubled state of lombardy, and pos* sessing a transfer outline of Ita Vinci's pictur:, painted this Cenacolo for the then Lord of Pon'e Capriasca, for a pittance or his daily bread.

It seems hard to arrive at the truth. What 's beyond question is that the little mountain churd $h$ possesses a gem worthy of being studied by loves of art.

ADUIFFOPRUGCAR VIOLIN? BY WALLACE SUTCLIFFE

There has always been much diversity of opinion as to whether Duiffoprugcar ever actually made a violin, or whether his work was confined to the making of the various kinds of viols, lutes, and other stringed instruments of his day. While some experts admit the authenticity of the six known specimens attributed to him, others claim them to be the handiwork of comparatively modern makers apeing his style of construction and ornamentation. It is impossible at this late date to prove with absolute certainty either that he did or did not make violins, and only by analysing the data and facts known or asserted can we conclude on which side the probability rests.

The two latest and most staunch advocates of Duiffoprugcar as the inventor-if that can be called an invention which was the natural outgrowth of the viol-of the violin proper, are Dr. Henry Contagne, in his valuable book, "Gaspard Huiffoproucar et Les Luthiers I.yonnais du XVI ${ }^{\text {. }}$ Siecle" (Paris, 1893 ) ; and Friedrich Neiderheitmann's "Cremona," translated from the original German by W. H. Quarrell (London, 1894).

The accepted data regarding Duiffoprugcar's life narrows down into a very small compass. Caspar Tiuffenbrucker, or, as he is more generally called by the French spelling of his name, Gaspard Duiffopregcar, was born in the Italian Tyrol, and was worting in Bologna early in the sixteenth century (cira 1510 ), and is supposed to have been invited to he Court of France by Francis I., subsequent to :e conclusion of the treaty in 1516, at the same tir as Leonardo da Vinci and Andrea del Sarto. It s here that Neiderheitmann makes a serious mis tatement in his work, in assigning the date Ijro to King Francis I. of France as carrying on war with Pope L.eo X. Francis I. did not ascend the throne till 1515, and his great Italian campaign did not terminate till Ortober, i5i6, when the Pope visited Bologna to receive the conqueror's conditions and sign the concordat. Duiffoprugcar resided in Paris some little time, but soon found the climate, or the intrigues and conditions of life there, unsuitable, and retired to the neighbourhood of Lyons, where, according to Neiderheitmann, he died in 1530 . Dr. Contagne, however, produces further evidence, from which he deduces that Duiffoprugcar was living as late as 1567 , or even later. His whole career, in fact, seemingly rests in a shroud of unsolvable mystery. He was, however, admittedly one of the most renowned viol makers, and is said to have been a: an early period in his life an inlayer, or mosaic worker, which would seem to be borne out by the wondrously beautiful work shown in several of his instruments of undoubted authenticity.

I do not intend here to discuss the pros and cons of the Duiffoprugcar controversy, but merely to give a few details concerning the violin attrilbuted to him, whici, by the kind courtesy of Mr. Joseph Chanot, its present possessor, we are enabled to illustrate. It was the first violin brought into general motice as a gemuine Duiffoprugcar, and was first mentioned by Fétis in his "Biographie Universelle." This violin then belonged to MI. Meerts, formerly first solo violinist at the Theatre Royal, and professor at the Conservatoire, Brussels, and was purchased with several others, subsequent to his demise, of his widow, by the late Georges Chanot. The tradition handed duwn with the instrument is that Duiffoprugcar, while working on some instruments ordered by King lirancis I., became acquainted with the Court jester, Triboulet, and furnished the violin at his suggestion with a carving of his head, with a falling ruff, in place of a scroll. 'This is an unfortunate tradition, as the violin is dated ${ }^{5} 515$, and Francis I., as has been shown, did not ascend the throne till that date, and if Duiffoprugcar was working in Bologna, as is supposed, at that time, he probably would not have known Triboulet personally till after his attachment to the Court, towards the end of the year 1516 . Tradition is often a lying dame, who glosses her story with seeming truth. There is no positive reason, however, why Duiffoprugcar should not have made the violin in 1515 , but he could scarcely have had the direct incentive thereto of the legend. The instrument was well known in Paris at the time of the late Georges Chanot's original purchase from Meerts' widow, and was generally esteemed an authentic work by the experts of that period. Mr. Heron-Allen, in summarising Comagnes work in his valuable firlelle bibliography, asserts that this riolin was made by Vuillaume, who is well known to have at one time constructed several violins a la Duiffoprugcar; but this can scarcely be correct, as Georges Chanot personally assured me that Vuillaume had on several occasions offered to buy it of him, with the arowed intention of reproducing copies of the instrument, but Chanot could not be prevailed upon to part with it Georges Chanot had the reputation of being one of the foremost and most discerning connoisseurs of his day, and he always looked upon the violin as the genuine work of Duiffoprugcar, and treasured it as a unique example of one of the earliest known specimens of the violin proper.

For the rest, as will be seen from the illustrations, the violin is of a large flat model, approximating to the grand pattern of Stradivari ; each corner is ornamented with a fleur de lis, and the upper and lower bouts of the back bear a floral device, all worked in the solid wood; the varnish is brown, and the tone of good quality, full and penetrating. The

For some time past a good deal of inquietude has prevailed among coin collectors who make a

to Coin Collectors speciality of the continental series by the report that at Rome there is in more or less active operation a system of fabricating the rarities in the Italian, and even ancient Roman, series, especially such examples in gold as command high prices in foreign marhets. The parties concerned in this business seem to have started, however, with a species of medicual money which could be reproduced without heavy outlay, namely, the extremely rare early danari of the Popes from the ninth century. These are of silver and of light fabric, and being of somewhat rough execution lent themselves with facility to the process. This was only, however, a starting point; and ever since rumours have periodically reached us of other attempts by the same artificers on a more ambitious scale and a more comprehensive plar. The most precious metal has conveniently united with some coin of artificial value and moderate weight to render the business more remunerative; and the imita. tions are so clever that even experts have been deceived.

Among pieces which have fallen under our own immediate notice are the aurcus of the Emperor Otho, the half-augustalc of the German Emperor Frederic II., struck at Brindisi about $123^{\circ}$ on the Roman model, the gold ducat of Louis NII. of France struck at Naples, the gold florin of Edward III. of England, and the sovereign of Henry VII. of England; but these are merely samples; and indeed we perceive in the latest number of the French Revuc Sumismatique an announcement of the following current falsifications: a half-thaler of Berne without date, copied from the type of a six. teenth century batsen; one of Uri following the type of the dicken of $1620-25$; thalers counterfeiting those of Zurich, 1559 and 1694 ; a gold ducat of Chur or Coire (seventeenth century); an ècu of Uri and Unterwald ; a gold ducat of Aymon de Montfaucon, Bishop of Lausanne (suspected to be one of the above-named Roman series of contrcfaçons).

It is quite unnecessary to state that forgeries of ancient and rare coins are almost concurrent with the coinage itself. Such deceptions are of more than one class. There are what are called contemporary forgeries, which are known in the Greek, Roman. Anglo-Saxon, and nearly every other series; there are middle-period rcstriks; and there are finally the frauds in course of perpetration under our very eves in the presence of a keen demand for the means of supplying gaps in cabinets. Altogether, the atmosphere is rather thick in a numismatic sense; and it appears to us that collectors, especially those of more limited experience, should be put on their guard against this grave danger, inasmuch as th se who are guilty of the mischief and imposition, in centrate their efforts on examples which are re lly worth only the melting price, and for which t ey

An expensive pastime, no doubt, for enough in the ordinary way is the expense of maintaining and driving even one of our hobbies. Let that one be print collecting, and the need of just such a book as the one under notice will be fult.
That the volume supplies a neerl of the moment there can be no doubt whatever, and if asked, as one often is, to recommend books on the subject, we should certainly name this first. The older ones, such as the Rev. W. Gilpin's, may be picked up

[^12]cheaply enough, but are mostly out of date, out of print, and all without illustrations. A book on "Fine Prints," by lirederick Wedmore, is in Mr. Redway's Collector's Series, with only one thing to recommend it-a fairly complete bibliography. Dr. Willshire's "Guide to the Study and Collection of Engravings" has an appendix of engravers' marks that must increase its uses and value considerably; but we cannot have ever. thing, and it is something to know where to look for a thing. A compact little book of refer nce. containing nothing at all but engravers' names, siates. and marks, is very much wanted at present, anl if the matter contained in Mr. Louis Fagan's Collectors' Marks," a booklet now out of print, auld be incorporated with it, the connoisseur would ant very little besides. But we have the public to hink of here, and popular "guides" there must be. The

When the chapter ralle "Hints for Beginners" has been read and rete:. the pupil will sail straight on with a :ery sure uide by his side. It is no easy matter, even with illustrations, to describe the engraver's methods so clearly that the differences between this and that way of working are at once understood by the reader. The broadest, of course, are the easiest, as when the comparison is between things differing fundamentally, like line engravings, etchings, and mezzotints. but when it comes to explaining the methods of printing in colour from one or more stones or plates, the writers are few who can help us; but Mr. Whitman has always the right word rearly, and the passages descriptive of methorls. the hardest of all to write, are particularly admirable, as for instance that on page 99 dealing with colour prints.

His way of dividing the mater may be the best on the whole. The custom with writers on painting is to treat of the several "schools"-Italian, Flemish, etc.-but for educating the eye of the amateur, teaching him to distinguish not only the different ways of engraving, but the good from the bacl of each kind, it seems best to devote entire sections to the different modes of engraving, and to follow their course chronologically. In accordance with this arrangement are the chapters devoted to etching, line engraving, mezzotint, wood engraving, lithography, stipple and aquatint (the two last being coupled because the ground in both cases is etched). Following these are the chapters on "Collectors" Methods," "The Money Value of Prints," and the "Print Room of the British Museum"-the last for

 addition to the bibliography of early Italian art. The great merit of this work is that it does not treat of the master essen-[^13]tially in the form of a monograph, but it "learly shows his place in the general movement of the Italian Renaissance. Mr. Kristeller lays special stres, both on the causes and the effects of Manegnas particular genius; in other words, he examines with the greatest care the influence upon him of the period at which he lived and his own influence up:n that period, and those that followed. With reference to the marvellous personality of the master, he has striven to bring home to the perception and leeling of the rearler how Mantegna reacherl out beyond all knowledge and study, beyond all conventions, with an infinite passionate feeling for nature which he endeavoured to fathom with the whole depth of his intellect. "Mantegna's ideal of beauty," he says, " is another than that of Bellini or Titian, Raphael. Diurer, or Rembrandt. In judging him it is, after all, a mater of no importance how high an estimate one places on this or that quality; the only ques. tion is, Did he attain his owin itleal? . . . His ideals were those of his encironment, and that he succeerled in placing them before the eyes of his world in so life-like a form that they recognised them as their own is provel in a sufficiently eloquent manner, not only by his fame and the eulogies of his contemporaries, but also by the influence his works exerted on the development of art, on the imagination of great artists as weli as the tremen clous effect which they produce upon us to this day."

To a learned biography of the painter himself. Mr. Kristeller adds a detailed description and analysis of his principal works, both the sarinu: series of frescoes which he painted in l'adua. Mantua and Rome, and such triptychs and pictures as figure in the museums of Europe and private collections. He also gives a list, invaluable to the collector, of all the known pictures, drawings and engravings by Mantesna, and of a grent number of works errmentusly attiluted to him. The luok is excellently printerl, and contains a large number of athirable photngravures and text illustrations.

We have just received the lirst volume of Dr. Mireurs " Dictionary of trt Sales" held during the eighteenth anal nineteenth cenA turies on the Continent and in England Val!able and America. This wurk, which will Reference be issued in six or eight volumes, with Book alditional supplements as requirenl, should prove a most valuable addition to the library of every collector of pictures, engravings, or enamels, and while not in any way supplementing Smith's "Catalogue Rinsomnt" should constitute an admirable and much-refuirerl companion to that classic book of reference. The new work will be within the reach of many collectur: to whom the present marke price of Smiths Catalogue renlers it an impossibility. Dr. Mireurs Dictionary will, when completed, cost between $\ell ;$ and $£ 8$, as against the price of $£ 50$ now asked ancl obtained for smith; moreover, it will have the advantage of being lirought upe-tate and of inclurling, as its title inlicatro, many items not mentioned in the older work. Another very strong point in its favour is the excellence and accuracy of its system of indexing, which is carefully explained in the introduction, and which renders it available for the most rapisl and exhaustive reference-a merit which will more especially appeal to all writers on art subjects. Another advantage to the litterateur is the comparative ease with which, by a discriminating use of this Dictionary, the exact position held by any artist in the public esteem during the last two humdred years can be easily traced and accurately defined; and further, the trend of the artistic tastes of any particular country and period, or of the two combined, can be easily gauged in similar fashion.

The clearness and simplicity of the author's diction is surh that any one with the most elementary knowlelge of french-and what comonisseur has not this, and more-can understand the book as easily as if it were writen in his own language. Mr. Bermatel (guariteh, of 15 , liecalilly, is the landem, ant, we imagine, also the American agem for the book.

Three pictures from Mr. Alfreal de Ruthechild's collection are reproduced in this number by his kind permissiom (see pages 87, 97, and 129). The article on his collection is unavoidably postponerl, and will appear in a future number.

The first year of the new century has gone by without bringing into the sale-room a single fine collection of pictures. Nit once during Pictures the past twelve months have we been able to stroll into one of the well-known l.ondon auction rooms to view an assemblage of canvases and panels of goosl quality which could hy any stretch of the imagination be said to form a whole, to be bound together by that mysterious link of kinship which, there is no doubt, does and should exist between the objects which form a collection worthy of the name. We should, incleed, have little cause to complain of this state of affairs could we lout bring ourselves to helieve that possessors of fine collections in this country were one and all retaining their treasures intact : but we know only too well that the secomingly irresistible power of foreign gold is depriving many of the finest English collections of their most valued treasures. Gone is Turner's wonderful "Rockets and Blue Lights"; gone Sir Joshua's "lady Betty Delme": gome the Peel Vandykes; gone that lovely Dorchester House Hobbema! How many more masterpices may have gone besides, without the beating of drums or the blare of advertising trumpets, and which one day, with a sad heart, we shall seek ia vain on the walls where they had hung for generations:

These great works have, however, all been disposed of by private treaty, and the sale-rooms have

been singularly barren of pictures approaching so high a standard. During December there was but one sale at Christie's that calls for special attention, that of December ifth, which was readered interesting only by three pictures. The one was a " l'ortrait of a Lady," by George Romney; she is seated in a landscape, wearing a pink dress, with a many-coloured sash, and a green scarf over her head. her arm resting on a table; the portrait is, no doubt. an early work of the master, whose lack of maturity is visible in many tletails; the landscape and foliage are broadly and vigorously painted, and the picture. with all its faults, such as the extreme narrowness of the lady's body and the curiously inharmonious colouring of the sash, bears many characteristics of Romney's work. It was in good condition, though heavily coated with old varnish, and was neither too cheap nor too dear at 780 guineas.

By no means so reasonable was the price prid, 320 guineas to wit, by a private collector for a sketch, " Head of a Yount Girl," by Sir Thomas lawrence. What there is of this sketch is extremely beautiful, but there is scarcely enough of it to justify this very high price. On a canvas 30 ins . y 25 ins. Lawrence had started to paint the portrait of a pretty girl with , iark curly air; with the er atic impulsiveness of the asster, he completed the :ce, possibly at one sitt g : the can vas was then Jiscarded and never tow med again ; the outline of the head sing scarcely indicated, and the rest of the ca as left absolutely bare. This study is very intere: ng as giving us an insight into Lawrence's meth s of work, and possesses, no doubt, singular merit of technique, but at the same time one cannot refrai from thinking that it was hardly worth so large a sum.
The third lot worthy to excite interest was one oret which there was much discussion both before and after the sale. The catalogue described it as "Miss Kemble, in white dress," after Sir J. Reynolds.
we do not consider exaggerated, upon its own merits.

The same sale included several pastel portraits by John Russell, genuine, but of inferior quality. The best, a "Portrait of Miss Golightly," in white dress, with lace frill, fetched 85 guineas. There was a large "Portrait of Mrs. Dyer," in rich yellow dress and powdered hair, with her child, seated in a garden, by some early English artist (certainly not Sir Joshua, to whom it was attributed), which was knocked down at 200 guineas. An extremely well

There was no possible suspicion of " $\mathrm{fa}_{\mathrm{a}}$ ' ng " about it, and it was undoubtedly contempor. \& with Sir Joshua; its authorship was the subject if much controversy, and some people, whose jut, nent is not to be despised, went so far as to decl e that it was a genuine work of the master him If. With this opinion we are afraid we cannot gui. bring ourselves to agree; we should be more ind: Al to believe that this very excellent work was paii. d by one of the President's numerous pupils unde his personal influence and perhaps in his own studi It fetched 250 guineas-a price which painted "Portrait of a Naval Officer in Uniform," by J. Hoppner, was not dear at 110 guineas; a socalled G. Netscher, "Two Ladies," the property of the late Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Edm. Commerell, V.C., G.C.B., was in reality a small copy of Vandyke, and fetched 52 guineas.

A lot interesting to sportsmen was a "Portrait of ' Maria,' the property of Genrge IV., winner of the Oatlands Plate, 1828, with Mr. W. Eilwards, the trainer, and James Robinson, the jockey, in the King's colours," by R. Davis, 1828. This picture, together with two racing jackets of King George IV.'s colours, worn by Robinson, the one very much faded and discoloured, was bought by Captain Holford for 34 guineas.

On the following Saturday nothing of great interest changed hands, almost the only high price leing paid for a large "Still I ife," by Snyders, representing a table, covered with baskets and dishes of fruit, with vegetables on the floor, and a parrot, dog, and monkey to complete the romposition. It fetcherl 360 guineas.

In no other sale-room in Iondon has anything of note appeared; but at Liverpool, Messrs. Branch and Leete dispersed the collection of the late J. G. Livingston, Esq., J.P. It consisted mainly of English water-colours and a few oil-paintings of the first half from the laswalic (olletion Cowt

of the nineteenth century, incluting fine works by Copley-lielding, William Hunt, David Cox, Hirket Foster, George Barret, and Sidney Cooper. Jo Copley-lielding fell the principal honours of the day, his oil-painting, "Wharfedale-Bolton Abbey in the distance," fetching $44^{\circ}$ guineas; whilst of his watercolours, one dated 1853 , a "Marine View with Shipping," was knocked down at 106 guineas, and another, "Scotch Loch Scene," at 60 suineas. "A Boy Resting," water-colour by William Hunt, reached 140 guineas; and "A Group of Cattle in a Siream," by Sidney Cooper, 1840,62 guineas.

Collectors are still content to pay high urices for engravings, whether in mezzotint or in colour, and three figures have been cons antly

 reached by fine impressions in goot condition. The recorl price so far this season was paid at Sothelys's on December ghth for a brilliant and very rare engraver's proof of "'The Duchess of Bedford," whole length, by S. W. Rey. nolds after Hoppner, in the earliest finished state, that is, before the etched letters, with full margin $£ 390$. At the same sale, Sir Joshua's "Mrs. Abington," by J. Watson, first state, fetched $£^{220}$ ios., and his "Anne, Viscountess Towns. hend," by V. Green, first state, £'7o.Again, at Christie's, on December 16 th, first states after Sir Joshua Reymolds atracted vigorous laiding. notal)ly, a fine proof of "Lady Hamilton as a Hacchante," by J. R. Nor are more morlern engravings and artists proofs entirely despised, as was instancerl low Meis somier's " 1807 ," engravel by J. Jacquet, remaque proof on vellum, signed by the painter, which rearherl £ 115 ros.; while Sir E. Lambears "Hunters at Grass," by C. (i. Lewis, artist's primf. signed by the painter, rearhel $£ 97$ i. 3 s.

This later providerl a striking confirmation of the fact that the price of engravings is in a wreat many cases governerl bensiderations of rarity and sentiment rather than by their artistic merit. A fel numbers lower down in the same catalogue was to the found another impression of the same ensraving. exactly similar in every respect save one, namely, that I.andseer's signature was absent. This en graving fetrhed only 18 guineas, so that if one counts this price as the actual worth of the arlist's prenf engraving, the monetary value of Lamlieter's sigmture upen it works out at $£ ; 8 \quad 15 \mathrm{~s}$., or more than four tumes that of the print itself.

In l'aris there have been several important sales: first and foremost that of the pictures, both ancient and modern, objects of art and furniture.

and li, lish pictures of the eighteenth century, a few moder: French pictures, Dresden and other German dima. as well as some Oriental pieces, miniatures and snuil-ioxes, clocks and ornamental bronzes, old lirench furniture, Flemish and French tapestry, the whole of whici realised a little over $£ 24,000$.

Ansing the pietures there was no single work of the really first orler, such as suffices in itself to make a collection famous, but on the other hand an opinion which is contirmed by the comparatively small price it fetched, namely $\mathcal{E}+12$. The Fragonard was a portrait of a man, identified by an inscription on the back as "Le Chevalier de Billaut," a brilliantly executed work, which fetched $£ 340$. "Le Moulin," a andscape by Boucher, dated 1743 , fetched $£ 406$; "La Musette," a garden scene by Watteau, $\mathcal{E}_{7} ; 0$. The only Spanish picture in the collection. vers lew were entirely deficient of merit. 'lhe linglish school was represented by two works which we reproduce, the "Portrait of Lort Derby as a Chitı," by Sir "Thomas Lawrence (scc pagc 138), ani "A Girl with a Tambourine," a pastel by Joinn Russell (sce page 136). The most remarkable among the modern works was a large ceiling, ig? feet by $11_{4}^{3}$ feet, by Charles Chaplin, dated 1872 , and entitled " Poetry." The Muse and Flora, surrounded by nymphs and cupids, are grouped upon light diaphanous clouds, and cast flowers to the winds. This beautiful composition, which breathes the spirit of the eighteenth century,

(1): :he great French eighteenth century masters, lious ar, Fragonard, and Wiatcau were represented, lun, :awever, by their best work. A pretty portrait of " Indemoisclle de Charolais" playing a guitar was attributed to Nattier, hut seemed somewhat doubtiul, only reached $\neq 26_{4}-p r o b a b l y$ on account of its large size.

The most valuable of the works of art in the collection of M. Lassalle was a suite of six armchairs and a settee of carved and gilt wood of the I.ouis XV!. periol, with coverings of Beauvais tapestry, representing bunches and garlands of flowers, musical attributes, and foliage on a white ground (scc page 142). This fine suite was formerly in the possession of M. Ch. laturent, at whose sale in 1897 it realised about $£ 2,000$. It now fetched half as much again, namely, 75,000 francs, at which price it was generally considered cheap. Another similar suite of the same period, the tapestry of which was not Beauvais, reached only $£ 500$. The rest of the furniture was not of extraordinary value, although it comprised some good decorative pieces; a pair of mahogany commodes, fitted with ormolu ornaments, fetched $£ 608$; and a fine panel of Flemish tapestry of the time of Louis XIV. reached $£ 360$.

A pair of Louis XVI. ten-branch candelabra, of gilt bronze, $36 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. high, went for $£ 600$; and a life-size white marble bust of a young girl, signed Roland, 1774, for $£ 582$ (see next page). The china comprised some very beautiful Dresden, the finest piece being a group, $16 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. wide, "Le Char d'Apollon," shown in the centre of our illustration, which fetched $£ 252$; whilst $f 160$ was paid for a pair of figures about 12 ins. high, representing two of the parts of the world (pase 141).

were particularly well represented, and yet the highest price of the sale was reached by the vork of a painter who can hardly be said to belorig to that school, although he was their contemporary, namely, Ziem, whose magnificent "L.e Soir sur le Grand Canal," fetched £,940. Jules Dupré's "La Chaumière," although of small size ( 11 ins. by 14 ins.) reached £752; and Daubignys "Cerf aux écoutes," two stags standing by a brook in the soft light of the early dawn, $£ 768$. A small landscape by Corot was knocked down at $£ 688$, and big prices were also fetched by works of Diaz, Decamps, Isabey, and Boudin.

The last month of the old year witnessed the sale of a mass of books of a very mis. cellaneous character, by which is meant that they were, as a whole, practically representative of nearly every phase of literature. Atone time such a con. series as that which conveniently passes under the title of Mr. Stradling's Library, though it consisted of boocks gathered from many sources, would have leen sold in sections. The tendency now is, however, to mass a number of properties together and to display them in a single ratilogue, accounting books of whatever interest as mere units in the great rush that seems to press inward with greater energy every year. This library occupied Messrs. Sutheby the whole of the week ending December 7 th, and realised $£ 6,2$, 6 , shewing an average of more than $£ 44$ s. per lot. At present the average based on the sales leld throughout the year is nearly $£ 3$ 8s., so this as, on the face of it, a good sale.

Whatever its merits it certainly attracted cons lerable attention, and some of the books dispose of were very important. The latter-day collecto of the English classics looked with affection on a ery special copy of Lord Byron's " Poems on Va ous Occasions," and in the guilelessness of his 1 aart ran e price up to $\mathcal{E} 129$. This book, containing pag xi. $1+4$, was privately printed by Ridge, of Ne: rk, in 1807 , and of the hundred copies said (1) wave been then clistributed, very few can now be traced. This one had an inscription on the title, "Edwi. Noel Long, Cold". Gids, from the duthor"; and some "Stanzas by I.d. I " on the fly-leaf, both of which were assumed to be genuine, but were probably otherwise. At any rate their authenticity being questioned at the time of the sale, the book was offered " not subject to return." It was in its original green boards, as issucd, but the back with the latbel was missing.

As Sheridan is reported to have said of the Ireland forgeries, when pressed by lir. Parr to pronounce themgemine-"Well, Shakespeare's they may be, but, if so, he was drunk when he wrote them "-so a critic likuwise expressed himself regarding I ord byron's three verses which appeared on the fly-leal in question. Fiven so, they are an interesting memorial of a great poct at his worst, and the price paid for the book may have been reasonable coough under the circumstances. Personally, we should have chosed it in preference to the lirst cation of the "Hymms and Spiritual Songs" of I re. lsatr Watts, which realised fl40, notwithstanding hat stme of the hearllines were cut into. That the original edition of these famous hymus is exremely scarce goes without saying, but that "it wropies very much the same peruliar position as Dinnanis ' Pilgrim's l'rogress'" is distinctly open to question.

In the first place, the "Pilgrims l'rogress" has heen areatly in evidence of late, and Dr. Watts's fyris have not. The recorl price of $f_{0}, 475$, pail in May last for a special oppy of the dirst edition, ha stimulated the owners of numerous litule BunIa , w throw their treasures on the market. On D) ember 5 th the "Second l'art," 1684 , realiserl $\pm$ I. It did not belong to the first elition, howet. For it hat not the imprint of N. Ponter in th. Poultry: According to George Offor, a great au urity in such matters, the uriginal edition has on. cut, while Lowndes declares for two. We know of copy which has three cuts, and when it is se: in the sale room, as it probably will be shortly, the question is sure to arise whether or no one or two of these cuts have been added, because, if not, Lowndes is wrong, and Offor doubly so. The science of book collecting, for such it really is, has now become so exacting that no one can be certain of anything. The theories of to day may be upset by the facts of to-morrow, as those facts will doubtless be qualified, or, perhaps, even destroyed utterly, like Nimrod's Palace, in the days to come.

To import a positive law into the hook-world, and to pin one's faith to it, is foolishness. How many potential arguments, for example, yet hang about "The Croniclis of Englonile with the lirute of Timis," which is supposed to have been printed at St. Albans, about the year 1483 , by the " schoolmaster," whose name has vanislied utterly. The example which sold on December 2 nd for $£ 73$ was fragmentary, and, indeed, no perfect copy is known to exist. One enterprisiner but incautious Bihnio. grapher boldly implicates Wynkyn de Worde in the printing of it, his brethren of the chase laughing heartily, as well they may, for the fallacy argues a great dorangement of dates and epitaphs. But laugh or not, this book, or rather what remains of it, comes from shadowland, and no one really knows anything aboul it. One of the least imper. fect copies that have been sold in our time realised $£ 220$ in July, 1893, ani would assuredly bring more now. It wanted but seven leaves, sume others being lefective.

Seven sales of greater or less interest took place in London during December, but there would be little or nothing to be gained by griving a list of prices in this place, even if it were possible to deal with so much material. Hesides, the amount realised for a book cannot, when it comes to be analysed, always be relied upon to furnish an indication of the quantum of interest attaching to it, or the position it holols in the estimation of those who sulordinate title-pages and techmical minutiæ to literature, and sometimes gather much valuable information from a work of little account in the market. It is conceivalle, for example, that Dr. Jenner's "Origin of Vaccine Inoculation," first published in 1801 , 4 to, which only realised $£ 1{ }^{1} 5 \mathrm{~s}$., would attract not a few who know the circumstances that ushered it into the world and something of the many pamphlets that appeared to support or comdemm the epoch-making discovery, and of Gillray's amusing gibes. Irom a monetary point of view, Stevenson's "Father Damien," printerl at Sydney in 1890, dwarls Jenner's work ulterly, and yet, in real importance, it is itself a dwarf.

Two copies of Stevenson's Tract were recently solil, and each realised no more than $£ 10$, though both hat manuscript corrections in the author's handwriting. About three years ago either would have sold for $£ 35$ or $£ 40$. Deny it who may, with what indignation he pleases, the star of Stevenson is waning if it be granted that the auction room is the best possible test of an author's popularity. Still, even $\mathcal{f} 10$ is a good round sum, and a note should be made of this "Open Letter" of $3^{2}$ pages, remembering that the scarce first issue printed at Sydney is without wrappers, and that only 25 copies were privately issued. After that the letter was sent to the Scots Obscrver, antl after appearing in that journal (Nos. 76 and 77) was pulblished at London in pamphlet form in chocolate-coloureil paper covers. The London edition is of little or no value; everything centres in that of Sydney.

Sentiment is, of course, at the bottom of thisthe same feeling that prompted someone last year to pay $£ 25$ for the first edition of Bradshaws Railway Time Tables, published " 10 Mo 19th, 1839 ." However useful this rarity may be as a guide to certain arrivals and departures on at least one portion of the railway system at the present day, jt cannot be doubted that the contemporary guicles are equally useful and far cheaper. In December last the price not only fell to $£ 5$ los., but two copies had to be withdrawn. Success has ruined this little railway book, and there must, moreover, be far more copies extant than might be supposed. Again, though complete so far as it goes, it contains the northern portion of the system only, that relating to the southern portion not appearing till Uctober 25 th in the same year. On the whole, one might he excused for thinking that Bratshaw's pioneer guide is not particularly cheap even at $£ 5$ sos. Rather would the wise man select that copy of the first exlition of Shenstome's puem, "The Schoul mistress," which suld at Colonel Grant's sale for £ 16 , and in December brought no more than $£ 3$ is. —another abysmal fall.

The truth is that many prices are, just now, not to be trusted. These are jumping up and down like shares influenced by doubtful rumour; galvanised into sudden spasms by an upstart and unstable Jashion. There are big commissions in the market, one dealer bidding against another to the extreme limit of his tether so far as works of a certain class are concerned, and neglecting many of the old favourites of a few years ago. Such prices as $£ 22$ for "Egan"s life in London," second edition, 1822 (original boards), $£ 126$ for the original edition of Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield," 2 vols., 1766 (original calf), and $E^{82}$ for a set of the 13 vols. that make up the "Amals of Sporting and lancy Gazette," 1822-28 (morocco extra), tell their wwn tale. Books such as these are being violently furced upwarl in the scale of prices. If such things are in December, when the auction season is supposed to have only just begun, what will they be in May next, when brighter days stimulate the spirits, spur competition, and welcome the inevitable rain of gold?

The furniture sales during December have produced some very high prices, but with very few exceptions the Hotel Drouot is responFurniture sible for the sensational bids, the Lassalle sale being the greatest contributor. Outside this collection, however, which is especially described, some very gool prices were paid for furniture, tapestries, and metal work.

On December $14^{\text {th }}$ a pair of Louis XVI. white marble vase-shaped candelabra, with carved anl gilt bronze decorations, made $\mathcal{E} 328$; while a small clock with a spherical dial, of the same reign, was sold for $\mathcal{f} 5^{20}$, after a keen competition, the price being double the experts' assessment. A thirteenth century Limoges shrine in bronze, with champ-licic decoration, and shaped like a house, fetched $£ 240$.

The best prices made in Paris for seventeenth anl eighteenth century furniture were $£ 3^{60}$ for a Regency book-case in pink wood, with chased mouns, and $f_{2}=12$ for a carved Renaissance table in walent wood, reputed to have formerly belonged to t.e Dukes of Burgundy; while plenty of pieces dur is the month made from $£ 35$ to $£ 150$. At Christi s very little of any particular interest was sold, thou h a large Chippendale knee-hole writing table : mahogany, with a rather interesting perligre
ant. erd, reached $£ 210$. The piece was most elat rately carved and decorated with a considerabl amount of gilding, and with fine gilt metal har. iles. At the same sale a Louis XVI. clock by Ch:s. Dut Tertre, Paris, in ormolu, very finely murielled and chased, and altogether an important piere, made $£ \mathrm{O}_{5}$; a Louis XVI. Bonheur du jour table in marqueterie, the back inlaid with figures and landscapes in ivory and coloured woods, alal with chased ormolu mounts, $£ 152$ 5s. ; and a Luuis XV. marqueterie commode by R. Roussel, $£_{1}=1{ }^{2} \mathrm{~s}$. A pair of Louis XVI. candelabra of bronze and ormolu, with draped figures of nymphs supprorting the branches, went up to $£ 170$.

At another sale at Christie's an early Chippendale mahogany writing table on cabriole legs, with Haw feet, went for $£ 37$ r 6 s. At a sale at Phillips and Neale's a fine Kensington commode, though not an antique one, was sold for $£ 5^{2}$ ios. ; and two pieces of very fine Boule furniture, about sixty years nli, from the palace of the late King of Holland, made $£ 3 \circ$ and $£ 24$ respectively. These pieces were in I ouis XIV. style, and particularly well made, and roulld not have been reprocluced for several times the price they realisel.

Messrs. Puttick and Simpson held their last suaranteed sale of violins on Tuesflay, December Musical ifth, igol, and we resret to hear a Instruments discontinued. But few of the lots call for any notice, and the greater number if the instruments were extremely poor in quality. 1.at is, which brought $£ 200$, the highest sum realised, was described as a violin by Stradivari, and it was purchased by a Mr. Griffiths, the father of a well-known lady violinist of that name. This instrument was certainly incorrectly describerl, as it was the work of Francesco Gobetti, of Venice. The fint that this violin was not a Stradivari was generally kinwn. and it was due to this that it did not fetch nure than £200.

There were a few interesting examples of oill E. lish work in the sale, but the prices paid for s. $/ 1$ instruments are still far below what they ought (1) realise. The highest price was realised by a (i. meello by Simon Andrew Forster, the last of th family arul the joint author with Sandys of the ". known book on the violin, which fetcherl & ${ }^{5}$ s.
everting to the Italian instruments in the sale, th next in importance to the so-called Stradivari wi lot jan $^{2}$, a violin by Carlo Bergonzi, Stradivari's only pupil. Although this instrument was knocked down at $£ 2$ or, we believe that it was not sold, the price bid being below the reserve. Had it been a finely-preserved instrument of this maker it would have been worth a much higher sum. It was described as being from the Gillot collection, and when this collection was dispersed by Messrs. Christie in 1872 the only violin by Bergonzi fetched $£ 42$.

It is of some interest to note the great rise in price that has taken place in the case of violins by the well-known Italian makers. Lot 49, a viola by Guadagnini, reaiised $£ 62$; had it been a violin instead of a viola, it would have fetched a much higher price. Lot $\mathbf{5 1}$, a violin by Nicolaus Gagliano, of Naples, realised $£ 50$; and lot 71 , a violin by Tomasso Balestrieri, one of the last of the followers of the famous Cremonese school, $£ 58$. Lot 86, a violoncello described as the work of the great Venetian maker, Domenico Montagnana, realised $£ 86$; but the condition and authenticity of this instrument were open to much doubt.

An old English spinet in perfect playing condition, and dating from the heginning of the eighteenth century, made $\mathcal{E}=0$, and two foreign harpsichords $£ 18$ and $£ \mathrm{r} 9$ respectively.

At a sale at the Hôtel Drount, a I.nuis XV. harpsichorit made $£ 250$; it was an exceptional instrument. and in splendid condition.

One of the most interesting sales held at Christie's during the past month was that of the collection of armour and weapons formed by the Armour Countess Rossi. Although there was mothing in the collection that was of exceptional merit or value, still it was carefully formed and representative, and singularly free from forgeries and "fakes." A sixteenth century helmet, with a fluted skull piece and bellows pattern visor, realised $£ 209 \mathrm{~s}$. 6d. ; and an Italian main gauche lagger of the seventeenth century, $£ 14$ ros. A fifteenth century sworl, with a vase-shaperl pommel, was acquired for $£ 8 \quad 15 \mathrm{~s}$.; two cup-hilted Italian rapiers marle $£ 9$, and another with a cup guard and guaril-a-filio, $£ 7$. The bulk of the armour consisted of made-up suits or half-suits, and the prices realised, therefore, were not of the highest.

Tue sale of the collection of Greek roins of Count Franz won Wotoch took place at the Hotel des Commissaires-Priseurs, 9, Rue Drouot, Coins l'aris, on the 1 th and 12 th of Derember last.
The collection was not an important one, but some of the lots realised, nevertheless, very high prices, especially the artistic and very fine pieces. Amongst these were two didrachms of Neapolis of fine style, which sold for $1,33^{\circ}$ and 5,300 franes respectively.

The total amount realised by the 4.30 lots of the sale exceerled 30,000 frs.

Tife most interesting coin sale of last month in this country, and one that attracted much attention in the numismatic world, was that of the late Mr. I. C. Wyon. That gentleman had inherited beautiful specimens of medallic art, executed chiefly by the celebrated artist, W. Wyon, R.A., and these, together with specimens of almost, if not quite all, his own works, made up a very unusual tout cascmble of charming, though modern, medals and coins.

Amongst the latter were several unique or nearly unique pieces. Such were the three curious crowns dated 1888 with a veiled bust of the late Queen, each slightly differing from its fellows; these realised about thirty pounds apiece, and can hardly be considered dear, their excessive rarity being undeniable. Perhaps the most attractive of the late eminent artist's beautiful patterns were a pair of half-crowns dated 1876 . On these the bust of Queen Victoria was depicted with an open crown, whilst the reverse shewed the well-known device of St. George spearing the Dragon. This reverse is not used for halfcrowns in currency, but it shewed to great advantage, and the coins being of exquisite work and delicacy, both sides formed really beautiful works of art. These realised $£ 39$.

Other out-of-the-way patterns and proofs were a sovereign and half-sovereign in silver, 1880 ( $£ 14$ ios.), a gold pattern ducat, $186_{7}$, and a doubie florin, 1868. These together fetched $£ 16 \mathrm{ss}$. A nice series of Wyon's pattern florins went for about $£ 3$ each, whilst a pattern franc (or ten pence) sold for $£ 5$. There were also some beautiful proofs of the Colonial coinage, notably of India, a set of which, in silver, for 2 and 1 mohurs and so and 5 rupees brought as much as $£ \mathrm{tr}$. The catalogue was curiously arranged, starting from the late Queen's reign and running thence backwards, so that the coins of William IV. now claim a short notice. Under this reign was catalogued the very rare and remarkable undated crown, the reverse of which really belonged to the preceding king. This superb coin realised $£ 26$. Under Gerrge IV. were some very rare proofs in what is termed " Barton's metal," i.c., copper with a surface of gold. Nine of these rarities sold for $£ 20$. Two pattern crowns in copper, dated 1828 and 1829 respectively, and each of the highest rarity, fetched $£ 15$ and $£ 175 \mathrm{~s}$. each. Some trial pieces by W. Wyon for coins of George III, were also of interest, but fetched (om. paratively small sums.

Mention must be made of the beautiful series of moolern proof foreign coins, many by L. C. Wion, and exhibiting charming design and delicacy of touch. These all sold very well, and readily friund purchasers at rather high prices.

This short epitome of the sale must not he concluded without reference being made to the exquisite bronze medallions by the Wyon family. All these medals sold remarkably well. Especially might be mentioned two sets of the Royal children, seven diminutive medals, of which it was stated that "the executing was a Royal command, being intended for Royai presentation only." These choice and pretty little medallions were executed by L. C. Wyon in $185^{\circ}$ from models from life. These averaged about $£ 1$ apiece, whilst the wax models from which they were executerl realised no less than $£ 15$ ros. The personal medals formed a really splendid series of portraits of many of the earlier Victorian celebrities, and those of the Art Union shewed the scope of the true artist's horizon when not hidebound by the petty limitations of inartistic corporations.

Tine prices of antique silver are, as a rule, almnst as steadfast as those of bullion or other absolutely marketable commodities, yet even now a bargain is sometimes to be picked up in early silver. We heard the other day of a Charles II. tankard being purchased at public auction in London for $6 s$. per oz. and re-sold almost simultaneously for twenty times the price, and then, of course, the new purchaser had an ample margin of profit.The prices realised during December for silver and Sheffield have been distinctly good, a Queen Anne monteith by Richard Syng, i704, making £. 44 s . per oz. at Christie's, and a two-haniled William and Mary porringer, dated 1690 , maker's mark "I.M.," £5 14 s. per oz.

Silver and Sheffield Plate

A Charles II. tankard with the arms of Earl Poulett engraved on it went up to $£ 6$ izs. per nz . The prices made by early spoons are always hina: a rat-tailed table spoon, dated York, 1675, wid made ly Margy, going up to $£ 8$ os.

Really good Sheffield seems to increase in 1 fue daily, and in many cases fetches higher prices tian silver itself. A large two-handled salver of Shet eld made $£ 2615 \mathrm{~s}$. at Foster's on December 5th, and a fine tea tray with embossed scroll borler $£$ at Branch and Leete's, in Liverpool, on December 1 th.

At a same sale a silver coffee pot dated 1734 real $1 £^{6} 3^{\text {s. }}$ gll. per oz.
] - apparent discrepancies in the prices made by pier:- of silver of similar design and date can usil..Ily be acrounted for by restoration, defer. tive marks, and re-gilding, and sometimes by one pierc learing the signature of some well-known silversmist; the value of an article of Queen Anne silver sold the other day was materially affected by the lifference between the marks on the body and lid of the piece in question.

Tue month of December has been exceptionally rich in autograph sales, both here and in l'aris, many of the letters in the various collec-graphs tions sold being of the greatest interest. Mons. Etienne Charavay's collection, which was sold at the Hôtel Drouot, was principally romposed of documents of the period of the first Republic or relating to I.ouis XI. A letter from that monarch in regard to the mission of the Earl of Warwick to Rouen, and dated 1468 , fetched only $£_{4}$ iss. 6il., while one by Prosper Merimée made $£_{5}$. and a book with Racine's signature on the titlepase £4.

At Sotheby's, on December 9th, 1oth, and 14th, there were many notable documents and letters, including six letters from Dr. Samuel Johnson to Mrs. Thrale, one of which reached $£ 22$, while the others ranged between $£ 4$ and $£^{8}$ apiece. A letter of Mirs. Abington, the actress, to Mrs. Pope, another arress. fetcher $£^{6}$; while the letter of annther theatrical celebrity, Mrs. Jordan, to her eldest son, the Earl of Munster, made $£ 75$ s. The correspondence of male members of the stage seems to commaml a far smaller pecuniary consideration than that of the wher sex, since one of Kemble's letters did hou get beyond irs. Lorl Nelson's autograph comminded $£_{10}$ and $£_{10} 1.5 \mathrm{~s}$., both the letters being howigraphs, and dated II.M.S. Victory, which, of crimse, adled materially to their value.
i long letter from Boswell to Dr. Johnson, of spial interest, was purchased for $£_{2}^{2} 41 \mathrm{~s}$., and all: her to Mrs. Thrale for £ 11 IIs.; which shows th , the recipient in some cases is as important a far $r$ as the sender in the matter of interest and val: . Crumwell's name on two warrants made $£_{4}:$ :s. and $£ 5$ 2s. 6d. ; while Mme. de Maintenon and Iaria Antoinette seem to have about an equal val: in the estimation of collectors. A signature if : apxleon I., with two holograph lines, mare $£ 4$, whil his signature on a state document did not go he: 1 £r is. A most interesting document signer by k,hespierre, as representative of the people, and countersigned by Barras, Freron, and other deputies, made $£ 4 \mathrm{r} 5 \mathrm{~s}$. The price of this document in a Paris auction would probably have heen considerably higher.

The December stamp sales comprised many notable prices, though no well-known collection has come under the hammer. Messrs. Puttick Stamps and Simpson held a four days' sale on the loth, ith, i2th, and 14th. Among the rarities may be noted a Mauritius $188_{4} 8$ postpaid rel, orange on white, medium impression, a pair, which sold for $£ 8$; New South Wales, Sydney view, 2d. dark blue, plate 2 , early impression, $\mathscr{E}^{6}$; 2 d. blue, the variety fan with six segments, £4; Orange River Colony 6d. carmine, first printing, no stop after "V," $£ 7$ 5s.; Servia 18662 paras, green on rose, error of colour, unused, $£ 415 \mathrm{s}$. ; Tasmania 1853 id. blue, an unused pair, cut close, $£ 67 \mathrm{~s}$. 6 d .; the Zululand 5 s . carmine, which does not improve in price, made £ 18 s.

Messrs. Ventom, Bull, and Cooper held two sales, one on the 3 rd and 5 th, and the other on the 19 th and 20th. The best lots in the first sale were: New Zealand 1856 half of 2 is. green on blue paper, used on the front of an envelope as a 6il., $£ 6$ los.; a Tuscany 60 crazi, brick red, $£ 6$ ros. ; 7.anzibar, on Indian, provisional, 2dd. on ra., plum, a strip showing three types, unused, $£ 3 \mathrm{i}$ as. 6rl.; Orange liree State 6d. blue, without "V.R.I." surcharge, a pair, $£ 4$ ros., a bargain as dealers' prices rum: a pane of 6o of the 6rl. carmine of the second printing, showing stop varieties, unused, fetched $£ .50$.

In their secoml sale the best lots were: Matta 1885 thl brown, imperf., an unused horizontal mint pair, $\mathcal{f} 9$; Orange River Colony, fol. carminc, an unuse:t pane of 60 , containing the irregular stop varieties, $£ 3$ I: New South Wales 18.54 -6 it., orange, a superl, unused, horizontal comer strip of six, in mint state, $£ 18$.

Several fine rarities were sold at Messrs. I'lumrilge and Co.'s sale on the 16 th , 17 th, and 18 th. A liritish Guiana 1862 provisional, rouletted, ic. black on rose, with border of pearls, unused, brought £26; Cape of Good Hope, triangular, is., deep green, block of four, with margins at bottom and right, $£ 1515$ s. ; a block of four of the De la Rue print of the 6d. mauve triangular marle $\mathcal{E}$ ro; an unused pair of deep emerald green is., $£ 3$; and an unused pair of pale emerald green is., £い; Mauritius, post-paid id. vermilion, two single specimens of early state of plate, used together on piece of original, in fine condition, $£ 24 ;$ St. Christopher 6 d . olive, an unused sheet of 20 stamps, $£ 17$.

Regrokition of Nemdibwork PieTures. -l'erhajs your correspondent "R. J.," who wants to know how to restore the ground of a needlework picture, may find the following hints of some small service:-

1. If possible the work should be transferted to a new gromul. In most instances, if the actual embrosilery is in grosd condition, this can be succesisfully carried out by a skilled hatnd, but if the piece is a valualie one the tavk should not be attempted by an amateur. 2. If the embroidery is too frail or tos elaturate to permit it to be transerred to new silk, the old gromel can be prevented from further splitting by baching it with thin paper pasted down with gend hom paste in which a little resin has been disobved. 3. If the gromud is bopelessly bad, and trimsforting is out of the question, it can be concealed by suteding the piece of work on soft but firm linem, not too fine, and then covering the whole of the frayed silk gromond with cither didt stitch (i.ce, strands of silk laid on the surface ans:l ledel down by crossing stiteles at close intervals) or very closely and everiyworked darning-stith. The silk used should be the sance cut iur as the original ground. -R. $\dot{E}$. IIE, In.

Y COLIECTION

B I All Joorothy nevili.
The word "coliection" which appears at the lead of this paper seems to me something of a misnomer, for such a term is hardly applicable to the various oljets d'art which I have in the course of my life sathered together. I have never, indeed, desotud my attention to collecting any particular sort of china or porcelain, nor has my taste been attracted to any one kind of engraving or print, or towards the furniture of any especial period; rather mas it been my inclination to surround myself with things which appealed to me cither by reason of their intrinsic beauty, their historic interest, or reputed rarity. I may add that in many cases I have, I must comless, preferred the curious to the beautiful. Be this ass it may, collecting in my own manner has, from my youth up, always been a great hobby of mine, though, as I have before said, I can lay no claim to having ever been a systematic collector.

Fior periods in furniture and decoration I frankly own that I care but little, combining (I fear to the horror of some of my friends) ofd English chests with I.ouis XV. commodes, and Sevres china with Worcester and bow; for I have alwass been unable to comprehend why I should not have the things I like ahout me irrespective of their period, history or style. Curiously enough, whilst my taste lies strongly in the direction of English art (for I am a great lover of sheraton and Chippendale, of Battersea enamel and Crown Derhy), the best things in my possession are French, and often do I reget not having devoted my attention to collecting old English furniture at a time when it was almost a custom to consign even the finest pieces to the garret or to the servants' hall,

SMAI.I. IIFEGE IN CIINA, SIIVER, ANIV FNAMEL
their phace being taken by the shapeless monstrosities which did duty as furniture in the early Victorian Era. The generation of today, which attaches such importance to period and style, cannot realise the artistic crimes which were perpetrated at that time, which, indeed, may be called the dark age of decoration. I remember my father at his house at Wolterton, in Norfolk, making a clean sweep of all the old English furniture and substituting abominations from London which still linger in my memory as horrible beyond words.

Still, there were a few poople who, even in that morass of the crude and common-place, stood upon firm ground, and who made some use of the splendied opportunities which then existed for acpuiring beautiful things at extremely moderate prices. Now, of course, almost eseryone has, or pretends of have some knowledge of or appreciation for books, pietures, engravings, china, or furniture ; but at the time of which I speak such a thing was contined to the wery fow, and the taste of even the most skilled of these would, I fear, compare nome too favourably with that of the expert of w-day, when everything has become so specialized, with, I think, good results. It the same time, I must saty that some of the prices which are now wiven appear to me to be unreasonably high. Certain coloured prints, for instance, are now frequently sold for sums which have the apparance of being quite disprojortionate to their real value, for when all is saile and done, a coloured print is, after all, merely the product of a mechanical process, and the differnee between certain states should not produed the enormous increase in price which it now does. However, I suppose the purchasers like them all the better on account of the huge prices which they have paid for them, and so evergone is satisficd, which is as it should be. Besides, many millionaires, with perhaps more money than discrimination, desire the best of everything at a moment's notice, and such caprices very rightly have to be paid for. These last, however, cannot be really considered collectors, for true col. lecting is of necessity a canke to me with an offer to huy it bat all double the price he had received, but I felt ums lling to part with it, and therefore declined his offer A time has gone on it has been valued at a highe and higher ligure, and of tate years I have been oifred sums for it which Mr. Wi.bl) would in his day have decmed widdy fintastic. Another set of which lam very fond is the Seves Garniture de Chomine illustrated on page $\mathbf{1 5}$. It is of a somewhat un. common design, and is very graceful and cheame This was bought by Mr. Nevill, who was a lons way ahead of his time in artistic taste, and was an "xed. kent judge of both pictures and china.

slow process, and one which forms and refines the taste, whereas mere buging on the advice of others is what anyone, no matter how ignorant, can do, provided his moncy bags are well stuffed.

Hut to leave these reflections, let me return to my own treasures. Perliaps of all of them, it is the Rose du barry tea service, a portion of which is shown on page 154 , that I value most highly. The complete set consists of twelve cups and satucers, a large teapot and a small one, and a basin and mith-jug, all the pieces being perlect. No illustration can give a true idea of the beauty of this set, of which I am especially proud, for I tretieve it to be almost unique. I bought it many fars ago from Wibh, of Bond Strect, an excellent firm, which has long ceased to exist, and the sum paid for it was well under three ligures. Ten years after its purehase Mr. Wehb

Forrest, of the Strand in his day a great deake Forrest, I remember, was said during the cholera epidemic to be abmost off his head from fear of catching it. He in consequence left lomdon, hoping to find safety in the country, but no sooner had be beeome settled down there than a violent attack seized him and he died-derangement of the nerves probably had a good deal to do with this. The sideboards, unfortunately, could not be illustrated in these pages. The piece which 1 value next to them is the commode which is shown on age 155. It is of the period of I ouis XV ., and is on sidered a beatiful specimen. The front, which i not shown in the picture, is composed of a slide for ond of imitation book-backs, as is not unusual in $t$ ese sort of pieces. Oddly enough, thoust its value has been recognised of late gears by exprets, it was ahmost passed ower altogether at a valuation which was made for probnte in $: 878$, but since that date knowledge and taste have vastly improved. The sereen which stands lehind the commole is of Spanish stamped leather, and is formed out of some

Mr. Nevill was very fond of pastels and bought at a time when they were not valued as they now are; indeed the prices of that day would now be considered absurdiy low. may be observed in the right hand corner at the top. I have been umable to discover who the su ject of the portrait was, but to me the face ap: ars of an undoubtedly French type. Perroncau s, 1 fancy, little known in this country. A . Walte: by birth he appears to have enjoyed a curtain reputatio as a portrait painter and pastellist, residing a foni deal in laris. Several of his works were enfral I by Marcenay, Rossi and others. He lived to a $: 1$ it age, and died at Amsterdan in 1793 , having ber: made a member of the Academy (Paris) forty year. before.

The asces and dish shown on page 1.54 with other china are blew du mi, and very beautiful. I purchased the a a very long time ago for a moderate sum; indeed at the time in question chime with landscapes painted !pm it was but little sought after. The etuis and small boxes and bottles, an illustration of which appe:ars upon page 15 , are sonn of them of considerabh interest. The box in the contre, under the Wedgwond vase, is of silver, and the colgraving upon it is reputed to be the work of Hegarth. A little oblong, rather square bottle, which appars to be of Wedgwood ware, is, nevertheless, not Widgwood at all, boing in reality a foreign imitation made at Sevres by French workmen. For the round box, which is of enamel, I pait a rather large price, but it in a charming little piece, attractive from its very simplicity. The curiously shaped egs-shaped bottle, which stands in the top row, is of Chelsen ware, and is an exeptionally fine specimen, being almost unique in size and quality. It was a procent made to me many yaurs ago by the Iord Carlegan of the day. Several of the things in this gro:sp were bought at the Rernal Osborne sale; B. O., as he was called, was a great friend of mine. I have always lowed etuis and littic boxes, and pee ess a considerable number of them, some beautiful. and others more valuable to me ioy reason of the associations than on account of their intrinsic Win $h$.

I another group (p. 152) will be seen some Capo di snte cups and satucers. Capor di Monte china, whe it is really good, may be known by a cortain lire a colour, which here and there, as it were, obscures the gold. These cups are very good ones, and were bought at lady Bkessington's sale at Ciore House. I remember Iady Blessington driving about in a barouche with two magnificent horses-looking very old, and with her head having the appearance of being enveloped in a huge white turban. I was never acquainted with her, but I knew Count d'Orsay very well, and perfectly remember how civil and polite he always was. His curly locks, velvet collar, and fingers covered with rings, were never to be forgotten. I used frequently to meet him at Lord Beaconsfield's, who at that time had a house opposite to us. In the same group is a little bust of Frederick the (ircat on a pedestal. This is of Meissen ware. lears ago my father, when travelling in Germany, purchased a number of groups and figures from the ohd manutactory: but, unfortumately, all of these, with the exception of this hust, were consigned for safety to the Pantechnicon, which, as events turned out, proved to be the most unsafe place possible, for it was burnt to the ground with practically everything which it contained. The two pieces which flank lirederick the (ireat are of Sevres china, and of great rarity of design, the ornamentation, which is of a maritime character, being curious in the extreme. 'The figures of which an illustration appears on page 153 are, as will be at once noticed, specimens of different kinds of chima, and are, I think I may say, good representative picees. 1 possess a good many china figures of different sorts, having always had a great lancy for such things. I always regret, as a great enthusiast for everything connected with my kinsman, "Horace Wapole," that I have so few relies of him and of Strawbery Hill. An obel English clock hought at the sale there is one of my great treasures, abd I have a few miniatures and books which belonged to him. My own portrat, which appoars at the beginning of this paper, was painted by my dear friend Mr. Watts very many gears ale, when we were both at lilorence, long before the great artist had become celcbrated throughout the world.

And now to conclude with a fuw remarks upon collecting-to the novice I would say buy at first litte and carcfulty, for a few grood things are worth quantities of doubtiol ones, which, as a matter of fact, have, as a rule, no value at all. Seize every opportunity which comes across your path of secing and examining good things, for very few possess an absolutely accurate instinctive taste, and even those who are fortunate enough to have something of this quality will find it improved by elucation. Do not be offended if you are told by people who are really experts that you bave made a mistake in any pur-chase-it is a thousand to one that they are only tulling you the truth, and you should be gratefil to them for doing so. If you resent their critici ms you will probably accumulate much rubbish is a monument of your own conceit.

Much may be learnt from books, but more fiom examining the things described in them, for iilustrations, however groed they may be, can never reproduce the slight natane which so frequently constitutes the difference between a genuine piece and an imitation. Above all, do not, when you lave acquired some knowledge, form too high an estimate of your own qualitics as an unerring judge, for the true collector is always ready, nay, anxious, to learn, well recognising that ignorance alone claims to be omniscient.

E(GIISH WINE AN1) SPIRIT GLASSES (1) THE IATE SEVENTEENTH AND) THE EIGHTEENTH CENTCRY
BY W. E. WYNN PENNY
Alithough pictures, potteries and porcelains, jewels, ivories, bronzes, and antiques of varid deseriptions have from time immemorial been acepuired by collectors, it is only of comparatively late years that it has occurred to men whose tastes lead them to appreciate what is beautiful, and whose knowledge thathes them the interest of association, to endeanour to prescreve for posterity the few remaining camples of the beautiful wine and spirit glasses which wire in use in the latter part of the seventernth and during the whole of the cighteenth century.

Fifty years ago, in a small town in ene of our western counties, there resided two gentemen with a wety been appreciation of these hatatiful and delicate objects, and it is from the collection leorised by one of them that the ghases illustrating this paper are tikin.

The colletor is naturally a man of varied experiences, for, by hook or by crook, be finds his way into cottages, country howes and old inns, and numer. on end amusing are his adventu: while gathering together hii " asures. Farly in the fifties, wh the two emhusiasts mention : started on their collecting (a) itions, it was their practice (1): with them a couple of sine ens, and to inguire of con! to and others in out-of. the comatry villages if they that: if whave any glasses of a similar nature they cared to dispose of On one such occasion a woman replied: "There! I had one just like he wi' th' blue stem, but I broke un up th' other day an' put un in th' rat's hole!" The regret with which those collectors left that cottage was almost equalled by their amusement at being recalled with the words-" Hi ! if ye want to buy any old clothes I can zell 'e zum."

The days for this style of collecting are now practically gone by, cottagers have grown too wise to use such treasures to fill up rats holes; but every good specimen has not set been caught up, and the keen eye may still diseover beautiful examples. Oaly the other day, for instance, the writer bought at a country inn for 2 s . an excellent old tavern glass of about 17,30 or 1740 , the bowl engraved with a rose and lilies of the valles.

Before 1680 large numbers of drinking glasses used in England were imported from Venice, although some undoubtedly were made in this country ; the very fow surviving specimens of the latter are well known, and the collector of the present day is unlikely to mect with any of a date anterior to 1660 . About this date the manufacture of the long series of varicties with which this paper has to treat began, and continued to the end of 1700 , when the period of decadence set in.

It is impossible, in a short paper, to describe fully the numerous varictics in shape and decoration of these glasses: but the may to roughly classed into the bell-shaped, drawn-waisted, straight-sided, and cupshaped bowls, and this sequence is, to some extent, the oreler in which they cane into use. Most of them hate sprally decorated stems, some white and some coloured, of great artistic merit; others are cut or knopped. Some of the bowls are decorated with engrabed work, by whecl or diamond point, but all are usually of fime and expuisite workmanship.

The illustration of a gas of this tepe (No. i.) is from the private collection rew ously mentioned, and, though the bowl is unad rned with any engraving, it will give an idea of the exed. bont design and solid construction, combined with it shape difficult to upset, doubtless a point to la considered in an article of every day use at a time when the bottle was freely passed after dinner. The precise dates of the glasses referred to in this article are difticult to fis, but about 1690 the most beautiful, perhaps, of the whole series came into use. The bowls were bell-shaped and frequently engrated with a rose ; most of them had their straight or knopped stems ornamented with spirally drawn theads of air in them. There is an example of such a glass in the slade eollection in the litish Muse um ;
with varied engravings on their howls, continued in use far into the eighteenth century; some of the later varicties had their stems ornamented with opaque white threads of glass in the place of the air wist, with occasionally a thread of rose colour introdeced. A specimen was onee shown to the writer-the mb: one of the kind he has ever seen-in which the tem had threads of rose colsur, gresen, and white enteind with charming effect. of ghasses and styles of decoration were made a speciality,

The drawn glasses-the word "drawn" is used leceatuse: they appear to have been bown from a single picce of glass and both stem and bowl fashionced by being drawn out with a single spiral move-ment--must be nearly as early as those with the bellshapeal bowls. They are seen in a great varicty of sian, the larger doubtless for wine, and the smaller for arelent waters : they were infrequently decorated w! :ngraving, the stems, from the nature of their me: ulacture, newer knopped in the centre, but $I_{r}$ wently reliewed with an air twist, and occasionally. w: an opaluue ribband of white glass. Those for tas a use had sometimes a tair, or bead of air, int fued at the top of the stem.
i more expensive sorts, doulotions made for We patrons, were in size and appearance sutable for nes. This opinion is substantiated by the fiet that my such glasses, the bowis of which were engraved, were decorated with vine leaves and clusters of grapes. The specimen illustrated (No. v.) is a most beautiful but fragie object, having the additional attraction of a bright bluc twist of glass worked under the opaque ribland decorating the stem, which gises a very rich and brilliant effect. The eollector who can obtain a specimen of a similar nature is a truly fortunate indivilual. The opinion of a good authority on glasses is that the example here referred to emanated from a Bristol glashouse, and considering the excellence of its manufacture, treatment of engraving, and quality of metal, assigns its date as not carlicr than ${ }^{1750}$.

Collectors will notice two facts with regard to glasses with waisted bowls: first, they are far more searce than those of the two preceding varieties ; they could never have found the same popularity with the purchasing public of their day as those of the drawn sbapes, for the period during which they were in use was comparatively short, a circumstance difficult of explanation, since the form is particularly pleasing. The second noticeable feature is the excellent quality of any specimen with which the collector is fortunate enough to meet, the metal being bright and cold, and having a clear, high ring when snicked with the finger mail, while the engriving of the bowls is skilful,

The carlient of these waisted slasses must bave come into use very shortly after those of the drawn form, with which they are closely allied, one shape being obsiously the outcome of the other, and the method of construction evidently similar. Some of the later forms of these glasses are engraved with vine leaves and clusters of grapes, the stem decorated with a spiral thread, or threads of opaque glass. The are classed together for the simple reason the it is difficult to difierentiate between the glasses ith perfectly straight sides and those which are d: wh in or rounded at the junction of the stem, ma ing them more or less cup shaped. Undoubtedly those with straght sides were the earliest ; the treatmert of their stems and the designs engraved on their bowls were, however, very similar to the remaining glasses of this group, which, differing slightly in shape from them and from each other, were in constant use side by side during the last thirty or forty years

No. VII.-Eightefntil Century mabobite wine Giasses wite mmbifmatic mecoration writer was once shown a pair of very graceful flasses of this shape, each having at the base of the stem, between it and the foot, a knop of glass containing small heads of air ; the stems were air twisted, and the feet and bowls engraved with lilies of the valley and ferns.

The last of the groups into which the numberless varicties of wine and apirit glasses of the eighteenth century has been roughly divided is now reatched, and the straight-sided and eup-shape bowls take us out of the century and awny from the glasses of which this paper treats. These form a large group, and of the century, when punch drinking was gencral throughout lingland. Many of these glasses of medium capacity wore doubtless used either for this delicious beverage or wine. The bowis of this eries were usually engraved, the most frequently notioed subjects being a small bird with outstretched wi g, roses, lilies of the valley, ferns, or clusters of grews and vine leaves ; a few specimens have been not ed derorated with a ship in full sail, or with subi! ets relating to political or social questions of the tine. 'The stems were usually ornamented with an ops we White thread or threads of glass, worked togeth. in an el ess variety of patterns. In the earliest of there tems the twist of glass is broad and tape-like in cl acter, diminishing by degrees as years go on III fiis: threads inferior to the older patterns both in dai and regularity of twist. Occasionally a specimetl seen in which an opaque white thruad and an air : it are combined with a very brilliant effect, and metimes a twist of ruby-coloured glass is found entwind with white.
USH this series must be included the glasses of simblar form for cordial waters. The rare type illustrat (No. iv.) has an unusually large capacity, the how is engraved with bird and rose, the short thick stom decorated with well arranged opaque white spirals, and the foot is of unusually solid construction. liery dilferent, and far more graceful, are the rather carlicr tall cordial water glasses, the contents of which would be no greater than those of a modern liqueur #lass. The tall stems are usually treated in a similar manner to the preceding glass, the feet are sometimes domed, while the diminutive bowls are generally free from congraving, but frequently fluted.
A ghass with a remarkably shaped bowl is illustrated (No. ii.), which is supposed to have been produced at one of the Bristol glass-houses: it is decorated with a tworder of roses and leaves which show signs of having originally been gilded, the stem is perfectly phain, and the date probably about the middle of the cishteenth century:
The decoration of the remaining glass in the group on pase 160 (No. iii.) leaves no doubt of the use for which it was intencled. few of these beer glasses secill to have escaped the ravages of time, for they are rarely met with. All, however, that the writer has seen are engraved with heads of barley, some having alse tundrils, leaves, and clusters of hops.
No article on eighteenth century glasses would be complete without allusion to those superlatively interenting historical relics, the drinking glasses used during the first sixty or seventy yars of the century by the secret Jacobite socicties, so numerous throughcill England, until in ${ }_{7} 88$ the death of the Young i'reconder caused them gradually to die a natural desth, leaving behind them as a legacy to posterity the Glasses from which their loyal and gallant members were wont to drink the health of "The King over the water"-longing for the Restoration of the representative of the unworthy dynasty to which they were so ardently devoted.

These very scarce and beautiful glasses were similar in shape to those in ordinary use during the same period; it is by the engraving on the bowls that they may be easily recognised.

Perhaps the most interesting of the series are those having the bowls engraved with a portrait, either full face or profile, of the Young I'retender, some of them bearing in addition an appropriate Iatin motto. In the Schreiber Collection at South Kensington is a wine glass $7 \frac{1}{4}$ inches high, the stem is knopped and contains twisted threads of air, the bow is engraved with a profile portrait of Charks lidward, the Young Pretender, in tartan dress, encircled by a wreath of laurel, flanked by roses, thistles, and a star.

The Jacobite glasses which do not bear a portrait on the bowl are usually decorated with the Stuart rose and two natural buds (supposed by som: authoritics to be emblematic of James II. and the Old and Young Pretenders), oak leaves, a star, and the word "Fiat" in italics. Usually all these symbols appear, but occasionally the word "Fat" or the star is omitted. Three excellent specimens are illustrated (No. vii.) ; theee will give a better idea of their beauty and interest than a lengthy description.

Tlue collector should never miss a chance to acquire for his cabinet any genuine specimen of these rare and interesting relics ; the prices of them are bound to have an upward tendency, as they become more scarce and more highly prized year by year.

One final word to the collector of the numerous varietics of eighteenth century glasses-heware of Forgeries. The writer could give a fow reliable tests, but in doing so be would be instructing the forger as well as his victim. The collector who has a true love for thesce fragile and beautiful objects will, from incessant study and admiration of his specimens, observe various little peculiarities in manufacture, design and decoration which will cnable him to detect the worthless copy from his valued original, in the happy possession of which the writer bids him adicu.

(OAHECTION OF EN(BISH SAMPIERS H MRS. HEDA

Chatcer uses the word "ensampler" as a synonym for pattern, and whon the sampler lirst made its appearance it was what its name indicates -a collection of patterns of embroidery, lace, and drawn-work, wrought on a strip of linen, which, sometimes mounted on a little roller, could be kejt for reference or passed from hand to hand as printed pattern books are to-day. Yet there seem to hate been some exceptions to this rule, for in Chappell's "Popular Music of the Olden Time," it is stated that a collection of songs entited "The Crown Garland of Golden Roses" (1612) contained "A Short and Sweet Sonnet made by one of the Maides of Honor upon the Death of Queen lilizabeth, which she sewed upon a Sampler in red silk; to a New Tunc, or Phillida Flouts Me." Such a sampler would appear to be the prototype of those worked more than two hundred years later "In Alemory of the Princess Charlote," but unfortunately only the bare desoription of this Elizalethan one has come down to us.

The majority of early samplers that have survived the vicissitudes of a couple of centurics are Jons and narrow, and filled either entirely with embroidery patterns worked in various stitches with coloured silks, or partly with these, and partly with evamples of lace (punto in aria) and that openwork which was so frecly uscel in the soventemth rentury for the trimmins of boely-linen and napery:
"These luolland smocks as white an anow Amel hurgets brave wilh drawn-work wronghi, A tempming ware they are. you know. Wherewith as nets gonimg men are cangin."

Sime samplers, boweser, are composed of patterns of "white work" alonce, and three of these are illus. trated in Nos. i., ii. and iii. The lirst is a very omall sampler (its actual measurements are but 6 ins. by $6 \frac{1}{2}$ ins.) of lace-work, and it was possibly intended to be more of a show piece than a sampler pure and simple, for it consists of but two band; of stitchery, one a comentional design, the other a quaint representation of Cupid drawing his bow at a lady. The lace is worked into a foundation of coarse, brownish linen, but at the foot is sewn a strip of fine: linen, whereon is embroidered the worker's name, "Elizabeth Hinde," and the date 1643 . 'This dainty litle piece is the earliest dated sampler known to exist, that honour having been shared, before its dis. covery, by the sampler shown in No. ii., and two others of the same year, 1648 . That illustrated in No. ii. is a little larger, measuring 8 ins. by $7 \frac{1}{2}$ ins., and its beautiful designs are executed chiefly in drawn work. The initials F . N. and N. $\therefore$. and the date toxis $^{8}$ are formed of : line nevdle-made braid sewn upon a late around.

In No. iii. is ilhustrated a sampler of what is foncrally known at the damask pattern, worticed enturely in Hat satin stitch, and eyelet or "bird's eye" stitch, with white thread on ychowish linen. There are two alphalocts at the lower end of the sampler, but it is undated, although it may be assisned with tolerable cer. tainty to the end of the seven. tecoth century, or perhaps wa slighty articr period.

In the next sampler shown (No. iv.) the artangentent of the patterns in a scress of horimontal hands, the absence of an encireling border, and the proportions of the strip of linen, which is 21 ins. Jong but only $6 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. broad, are all tepieal features of the ordinary sampler of the priad. It is mot. however, a very claborate nor interestin:s specimen of it, kind. but its condition is perfect, and the bance rhyme has an unusual third line:

> " Ilamah Canting is my Name And with mue Nerel I mout the same, thed freth thay/e is my Dome."

Sanders's sampler has very few paterns, and with one or two exceptions these are of the simplest style; but, on the other hand, it boasts of a "magic square" of numbers, together with a large and varied assortment of moral axioms, all neatly worked in two or three "marking stitches." Must of the inscriptions are familiar to students of sampler-lore, but the two last are decidedly uncommon. They are as follows:

"If Breath were made for Fivery Man to buy, The Poor Man could non Live, the kich could not Dic."
"I have read and have lieen twhl, That a vertuous girl is worth geld."
Samplers covered with alphahets, moral and religious axioms, and Scriptural excerpts, secm: to have grown in favour during the first thity year of the cighteenth century, but the long sampler iliustrated in No. vii. is a reversion to the older and $n$ ore decorative type. It is dated $\mathrm{r}_{2} 8$, a period when the all-round border had made its appearance, and the sampler was setting broader and shorter; but all the patterns in this specimen are early, and include the curious one of small grotesque human figures carrying some mysterious objects, which is found upon many seventeenth century samplers, and has, in the writer's opinion, an Italian origin. If No. vii. were undated, and were not worked on a peculiar yeliow linen that was not introduced until after the jear 1700, it would most assuredly be assigned to the lirst half of the seventeenth century. Its measurements are 27 ins. by 9 ins.

The sampler worked by Elizabeth Dainty in 1742 (No. vi.) shows the encircling border which became general from this date onwards, finally developing into that sprawling, semi-realistic, foral wreath which is so ugly a feature of the sampler in its last and worst stage. A favourable example of an all-round border is seen in Martha Harmer's sampler, shown in No. ix. The design of this sampler is frequently met with about this date (1757), the panels in which the hymn is embroidered being obsiously suggested by the Tables of the Law, which were in former days intariably hung at the cast end of all churches. In many instances a metrical version of the Ten Commandments replaces the verses worked on the sampler reproduced here.

After the middle of the eighteenth century the sampler rapidly lost all remaining traces of its orisinal meaning and purpose. The lace and cut-work had vamished early in the century: The band arrangement of the embroidery designs followed ; the patterns were scattered more or less at random over the woollen tammy or "sampler-cloth," which replaced the more durable linen as a foundation material, and the beautiful conventional motifs were succeceled 1 y bizarre and uncouth devices which, athough interesting in some degree by reason of their very absurdity, could never be adapted to the decoration of aly article of apparel or of domestic use. Cowperst may he fitly applied to the nineteenth centure sampier:
"There might ge see the peony spread wide,
The full hamen roms, the shepherd and his lase:
Lapklige and lamblin with black waring eyes,
And garrots with twin cherries in their leak."

Map samplers came into vorue within the ast twenty or thirty years of the cighteconth conturs. and these, which were intended "a double debt to 1 " by teaching geography and the art of stitchery a the same tine continued to be worked up to about 1812 . Darning samplers were also worked by most school girls during this period, and thesc, so far as the alctual needlework goes, are by for the best specimens of the period. Their desisn, however, invariably leaves moch to be desired, consisting of an ungainly bumeh of Howers, or a lop-sided bosket, surrounded by sphares or erosses showing different baricties of darnsdamast, muslin, and linen darms, for instance. I Juring the first thirty of forty years of the nineterenth century many fancilul kinds of simplers were executed, and they wore of all shapes and sizes. The largest in the collection from which the material for these notes has been derivel measures no less than $4^{\circ}$ ins. bey 38 ins., and had served as a table cower prior to its last rhange of owners. The smallest, a dainty markinssampler, is but 3 ins. long and 2.3 ins. broud. Another eccentric specimen, with alphabet and hym ancircled by a saudy wreath, is round, and seems to have been intended for a cushion cover, or perhaps as a pand for a pole sereen, while other varieties ate mounted as "house-wives," bags, and watch pockets.

samplers worked in certain parts of the country had some special characteristics, a knowledge of which is often uecful to the collector. The alphalets in Scotch samplers, for example, are generally wate and hold in style, while samplers from the 1 , rth. castern counties of England are nearly alwa, of small size, and coarsely worled in wool, the sre, und in many clses lwing a yellowish camas. Irish samplers, asain, may frepuently be identified by the sacred monograns: and emblems introfuced in their desigin.

A fear or tw, ago a sudden rise took place in the selling value of samplers, owing to the inereabe of popular interest in them, and for a short time absutady high prices were asked, and occavion. ally given, for eren poor and comparatively mokern sperimens, but the "boom" was of brict duration, and for mediocre samplers only mediocre prices are now obtained. The value of the really fine and carly ones, however, continues to increase. At the sale of samplers and embroidered pictures held at Soblebyes in June last, the primeipal prices pad were $A 8$ for a long sampler in extremely good condition, dated 1679; 6.65 s. for a less perlect one dated wat 8 : and E,7 for the sampler shown here in No. vii. Toms year which has just gone by has undoubtedly been one of the most fortumate for the are rollections belonging to the Italian nation. It hesaln with the purchase by the state of the beatiful Classic: Muscom lioneompagni, preserved at one time in the palace which is now the residence of the widened queen ; and it closed no less worthily with the acequisition of the borghese Museum and callery: Roth houses of parliament grasped the artistic and prelition importance of the measure, and hastened to approse it, abmost without discussion, when it was proposed by the (iovernment ; in so doing they gratifed the wishes of all lovers of art in Italy, who realise the moral ascendency gained at the present time by a mation which proves itself an appreciative and careful st:ardian of its artistic patrimony. In the present abse there is additional cause for congratulation in the fact that the Borghese Gallery was acquired upon very adeantageous terms. The collection, it is Erue, was one of the few still lelt in Rome which are b, virtue of an ancient law indivisible, inalicnable, and imbosable, and therefore the state deducted a ex. tain sum from the purchase-money because of the hold it hat upon the collection. Sill, the sum of $\mathcal{E} \cdot 1+4.000$ is mudoubtedly much below the real value of the fambus (allery whose walls enclose some of the most Inaatiful examples of Italian art.

If would be a lons and superfluous task to attempt as :mplete description and illustration of the Borghese Ga' rey here, for it has been for years a theme of ven 'alnt writing. Moreover, I do mot wish by the str of weighty erudition to efface and owerwhelm the wh and vivid impression mate by these works of $t$. I only wish to present to the cultured and art bing public a brief commentary upon the m: rpieces of the collection, leaving them, as they 10: Wefore the eyes of the reader in a vision of light an lory, to spatak for themselves to his soul in the lan lee of purest beauty.

I: the heart of the magnificent villa which Carchal Seipione borghese built in the first years of the serenteenth century, as a monument of the : iblendour of his house; in a quict spot silent sate for the "arbling of birds, the murmur of fountains, and the rastling of the trees, which seem to protect it from the vulater size, stands the fair dwelling which contains the works of art collected by the ambitious and munificent nephers of Paul $V$. On the ground foor is the Wuselum ; on the first floor the Gallery. Of the Museum little, unfortunately, remains since the day when Prince Camillo lorghese sold to Napoleon I. for the louste two hundred of the works of art which had been earefully collected, in the course of two centuries, by (ardinal Scipione and his sucecssors, until 1782, when dareantonio, in repairing the palace, omricted the Musemm with the groups of statues found buried near Gabi by (avin familon, but in these ransacked halls, to which belongs the sad memory of so many lost works, there still remain some mareellous conceptions wrought in marble. Over all triumphe a group by bernini (seventeenth contury), representing Apollo overtaking loaphone, transformed in her flight into a laurel tree (see fose afo). The noble fisure of Pauline Pomparte, the wife of Camillo Borghese, also shines with entrancing beauty, represented by intonio Canowa in the guise of Venus, holding the apple of diseord (see fuge 8 8t).

But far more important and beautiful than the Museum is the Gallery, which oecupied the first rank amons the prisate picture galkeries of the world, if not for the variets, at kast for the value of the works it contains; not for varicty, becanse the lorghese (atlery is essembially a sixteconth contury collection. Though it contains some stupendous examples of that fifteenth century which represemts the period of the ghorious ascent of ladian art enwards perfertion, it would be vain to seck there any works belonging to the two previous centuries, when the new art, relased from the bonds of Byantinism, developed the themes of antiguity, and determined the sehemes of the great pietorial compositions of the future. But it cannot be said that any one of the great Italian schools which sprang up in 1400 , and shome forth in the fifteenth century with supreme splendour, is wanting in the Borghese (iallery.

First and loremost, the Venetians are represented by a long series of works which form a worthy crown for the masterpieces of Titian Vecellio, Of the siant of the Venctian school the Borghese collection has the bonour of contaming the picture which has attained, perhaps, the widest celebrity of any paintins in the world- Sacred and Profane Love, for which Baron Rothischild recently offered the large sum of f200,000 (see betore). I have called the picture los this mame simply to identily it, but I hasten to add that the subject of this marvellous glorious old masters. It is impossible to expre is in words the mysterious fascination which ema rates from these two noble and graceful figures, apon which the artist's brush, dipped in softest :ues, sems to have passed and lingered, light as a caress. It is impossible to describe the charm of the tevere of the brown hair outlined against a sky of utmost purity ; the transparency of the flesh with its tints of snow and gold ; the softness of the shadows light as mist; the brilliance of the drapery; the smiling aspect of the trees and flowering fields and of the landscape, the last lines of which melt into the haze of the distant horizon.

composition is unknown, and therefore various titles have been suggested as adaptable or adapted to it. Some see in it Beauty admphed and Beauty umadorned. some Artiess and . Sated Lare, some Innocence and Experience, and so on. Titles like these are easily found, and their number only shows the difficulty of hitting upon the most suitable one. We do not pretend to solve the difficulty, nor are we greatly concerned with the legend which the picture represents, the myth it illustrates, the noble lesson which it inculcates, or the symbol which it expresses. It is sufficient for us that the picture contains a contrast, one of those contrasts so frequently found in the art and literature of the Middle Ages and Renaissance; that it is one of those solemn and exquisite pictures which make evident, even to unintelligent eyes, all the refinement of feeling, the delicacy of thought and technique of the attrihuted to the artist's youth. It belongs to the period in which he painted the Bacchus and Ariadne and the Noli me fangere of the london National Gallery, which, though less brilliant than the borghese picture, undoubtedly resemble it in the character of the figures, and above all in the colouring. Titian here shows himself as the poet of grace and beauty before he had leamt how to draw from that very grace and beauty the degree of power and dramatic effect which he afterwards displayed in the Assumta of Venice and in his later works. The spirit of his great master (iorgione seems still to possess him entirely, to direct his thoughts and guide his brush in quest of the loveliest ton and most delicate harmony. Completely Ciorgione aque is the spirit of the Borghese picture; how like Giorgione is the type of "Irofane love," wheh is almost the same as the figure of Ariadne ane that

Boother picture in the Borghese Gathery shows, on the ontrars, the artist's last manner, femes b/indfoldias loee, painted in Titian's old age in 1565. It is a joyous picture, daring in technigue, most effective in modelling, and powerful in colouring. A glorotes work, no doubt, yet neither in the robust figure of venus, nor in that of the attendant holding the bow and quiser, can we succeed in tracing the former peetry of the artist. Be: sides these two works of Titian we mast not omit to mention his powerful ligatre of S. Domintic, nor the Cherist laned to the Pithar, which rellect the ariat s last manner, thoush the scond has suflered in restoration. Here are also works of two of his pupils, laris Bordone and Jacopo bassano, but mferior to other examples of their art. savoldo is represented by a charming hoad of a young man, J'abma Vecelaio by a foucresia of exquisite fairness which, according to Venturi, may be convidered as the serm of the pieture so repeatedly panted by Palma, the primitise type of his beatutiful fair wo:ner. Two other encellent arlists worthily complete the roll of line tians in the borghose dallery with works among the most admered examples of their art-lorenio 1 .otto ame intonelle da Mresina. The former, besides a life like portrait of a :rolloman with a bery sad expres. sim, is repreacoted by a small pieture of :he forstin and Child rath . firimts, whan combines skilful lechmigue wite depth of feeling. The picture bears the date I $5 \cdots$, and therefore ledongs to the artiots gouth, at the we when be was kess influsened by the work of (ia :onc, who was still allite, than by the manner of hi. an master, Giowami Bullini.

which are among the artist's best works. Some of the numerous pictures in the borybse (Gallary, which still bear his name, are the work of his pupits. Some are hy his not undistinguished imitator, casily recognised by the long, thick, knotty finger, which appears on many of his figures, outstretehed in the act of pointing. From this peculiarity the unknown artist came to be callecl the "master of the rege linger" (il macstro del ditonc).

Far more important than much of Garofolo's work is that of the brothers loossi. liattista di I cosso, though the lesser of the two, has shown himsea the stronger colourist in a Holy Family and in a beatiful landscape in which Calisto appars expelled by Diana. heut his brother (iovanni cxcels him by his grancleur, his boldness, and his ardent touch anel brilliant colouring, which appar above all in circe. This picture may rightly lee clamed as one of the gems of the collection. The artist who hate to restrain his fancy in the composition. of sarred pietures, and ever robled them of a:l mysteism and intimate charm by his lavish introduction of silk, brocale, and velvet, scems here to have foumd a the me more suited to bis artistic spirit. Al last he was able to allow his fervent imagination to take its flight, free from all restraint. The sorceress is represented richly dressed, with a turban of gold upen her head, seated, haughty as a queen. There are rose busbes in the foreground, and in the centre are her symbols, and the different animals listoning attentively to her awful speils. In the background lies a landscape richly varied with hills, and trees, and towers. The artist has meglected nothing to make his representation more vivid and increase the solemnity and mystery of the scene. which stands as a proof of his skill in combining and harmonising the most brilliant hues.

I will not dwell upon the four little picturw by Mavaolino da ferrara, the minutelyaccurate painter of small heads, for there is nothing truly characteristic of his work in the liorghese Gall-ry. It only repeats will more or less detail the usual style and themes which appear in all his pictures, including those in the National Gallery. I preffer to pass on to another little known and much discussed painter, Cionamii Battista kenvenuti, known as Ortolano. A Desemt from the Cross by him hangs a few steps from that by Raphacl, and both of these we reproduce (ser fases 179 and 180 ).

So little is known of Ortolano that his very wist enee has been doubted and denied. .ht one tine it was held by many that the group of pictures wt ich bear his name to-day-the Deposition in the Borglewe ( iallery, the Natizity in the loria Gallery, the $S$. But little by litte it wa preeved that all these works had certain well defir : characteristics in common, and that there was 1 , reason to deny them to this artist, who must und Anedly have flourished towards the end of the Gifies uh century. It is true that his method somewhat resembles that of I oosso, and that his colouring has eme relation to that of Garofolo, but ant aboidutely personal note hits lately been perecised in li: work. His manner of painting trees with late. . Whek, seprate leaves, flattened as if they hat been presied in a book; the skin of the hands wrinkled like a kid glowe; cortain tiny figures strong! illuminated with white which appear in the backeround of the pietures ; the characteristic toothWhaped reck; the somewhat bristly hair; all these charateristics are found in the borshese picture, and in that in the National Gallery, both of when certanly helons to the same period, and have not their match among all the works now attributed to this artint.

However great the interest attached to the group of Firrarese who appear as the connecting link between the Venctians and Bolognese, the work of the Vmilian masters in the borghese (iallery is of preater value. Among these, let us give the preacdence to Franceseo Francia, the great leaker of the Dolognese school. Behold his St. Stephen in lus ruby red dalmatic, bright as enamel fae fase 183 ). The holy martyr is upon his knees in lerwent prayer, the blood from a derp wound in his head streaming over his gouthiul countenance. At his feet are the stones, instruments of his martyrdom. 'The sceme on one side shows a terrate with a c:arved balustrate, and adorned with antupe columns owerlooking an undulating landwape batled in pearly light. The pieture bears the name of Frameia, but no date. It belongs, doubthes, th his first years, before his hand had grown unaceusconed to the use of the burin, for, like so many other mat lers of the fifteenth century, he was a goldsmith belore he look to printing. But let us return to the beautiful cinquecento，and remain in admiration，for we are still in Emilia，before the Dame of Antonio Allegri，known as Corregtio． This marvellous picture is one of the most celebrated in the gallery，and was certainly painted by Correggio in the full maturity of his genius，only two or three years before death cut down the young life which had given so many fragrant flowers to art．In his early years the painter was educated in the school of Bianchi Ferrari，at Modena，and rejoiced in his vivid colouring．But gradually he modified and softenee the hues of his palette，his flesh tints grew palif，his contours less hard，his figures lighter and more deli－ cately transparent．It was then that he painted the charming Modonnina，which is one of the gems of the National Gallery，and the modest figere of Danac Conquered by Lore，which is the pride of the Borusese Gallery：＊This picture travelled for three centuries from one end of liurope to the other，and remained in london for some time in the possession if the Dukie of Bridgewater；it was purchased in 1823 he the lorghese for $£ 285$ ，and to－day is vale：d at £ $+0,000$ ．

Here also are two portrats by Pontormo; one of a magistrate and the other of (ardinal Maredlo Cervini degli Spanoochi (who was Pope Marcellus II.). The second, which is infinitely superior to the first, is attritutes wo Pontormo by llorethi, and by others to Prex del Vaga. The opinion of Lermolieff is now gencrally accepted. On the wher hand, it is rejected in the case of the wo works which bear the name of Amelsat del Sarto, which he does not atmit to to the work of that mater. These are

Venturi, on the eontrary, recognises in boul the hamd of Andrea due Sarto, observines that we / /oty Sambi, thoush the orisinal of so many copies, shows a certain weakness, and should therefore be attributed to the painter's last yeir.

The Deposition of Raphacl, with the Datrac aml Sacred and Profane Love, form the unio of pictures for which the fime of the liorghese ballery stands highest in the worl: The Deposition (see pare r8o) bears the late 1507 , and is therefore only a ycar late: :han the Madonna degri Ansidet, in the National Gall : Y , and shows, in common with other works of the me period, the conjunction of Umbrian and Tue on ekements which the master of seareely more than went jone had assimilated in his visit to florence in 1 4. Esquisitely beautiful is the fisure of Mary Magdalen in tears, bending over the body of Christ, to raise the lifeless hand which hangs betwern her own, to gate once more upon the eyes from which the light of superhuman kindness beams no more. convent of Perugia, until it was placed in the Borghese Gallery. It is valued in the inventory at $£ 40,000$, but it is evident that this is below the value of the pieture when it is romembered that the Madonne des ${ }^{\text {di }}$ Ansidei-beautifully preserved it is truc, but inferior as a work of art-reached a price almost doulse.

Joes the masterly portrait of a man (see page 173), near that by Antonello da Messina, belons to Raphacl? Is it not rather the work of Perugino? The question is still unsolved. Both opinions have their partisans. At the same time, the difficulty of clearly separatines the mature work of Perugino from that of Raphat's youth is well known. It is sufficiently proved by the doubt in the case of the Afollo and l/ersions of the Louvere Howerer, the delicate modelling and certain nriginal now in the gallery of the louvre. Neither will we dwell upon the works of his school, but turn our attention instead to a small altar-piece ree ntly attributed to his contemporary and fellow stulent. Fiorenzo di Lorenzo (see pate 178). The staw of preservation of this picture is absolutely marse!inus. In the centre is Jesus Christ upon the cross ; on the keft St. Jerome knecling on a grassy mound near the ate; and on the right is St. Christopher with his feet in the strean, in a haughty posture. In the background stretches a beautiful landscape, displaying castles, hills, streams, and the paths of verdant Umbria, richly wooled with olive trees. The water, in which the fish are visible, is rendered with perfect truth. The mantles of the saints, resplendent with gold, adel brilliance to the sceite. A golden mist seems to float in the atmosphere, resting upon cverything sate the livid body of the eruefied Redecmer. The picture was attributed to P'inturricchio, but if it displays his colouring, it lacks the great facility of that artist, from whose work it is further distinguished by certain peed. liarities of style, which belong solely to his master, Fiorenzo di Iorenzo.

There are many works in the Borghese (iallery by other than Italian painters. Among these should $b x$ noted a masterly Christ Deposed, by Vandyke; a Fisitation, by Rubens, which served as a model of that Which the artist painted on one of the wings of the Defosition at Antwerp; also numerous works ly Flemish and butch painters; la. temier, Pieter Codde, Pitter de Hooch, Breughel, Honthorst. ctc. It is impossible for me to mention all these separately, or to dwell upon other Italian pietures which deserve mueh more than mere mention. Such, for example, as the works of liere di (osimo, Guido Reni, Guercino and Caravageio, or a finc portrait of Aheddalena Strossi, attributed to Ridolfo (ihirlandajo, or it may be Andrea del Sarto. A portrait of a woman, in very bad condition, is perhaps by bernardino licinio, but in connection with it the great name of Giorsione has aiso been mentioned. Hower r, to prove how important an acepuisition the purch en of the Borghese Gallery is to the artistic inherital cof the Italian public, it is sufficient that $I$ nase mentioned the principal works, the names of thich remain eternally inscribed in letters of gold: the glorious book of Italian art.

SUME NOTES ON PEWTER AND THE IEWTERERS CRAFT
Bi I. ANGFBY WOOD

It is a curious, but interesting, fact that an imlustr: such as that of pewter making should, whin the last seventy years, have clropped almose entirely nut of bogue, and that the means of mixing and handling the metal, the forms, and even the marks with which the wares were stamped, should have been almost entirely forgotten. For this we have to blame the introdurtion of cheap glass and arthenware, and such substititen at enamelled and japanned iron, tin, ctc., which have ousted he their very cheapness the beautilul silvery metal which for so many centuric:s held its phate alike upon the tables of the moble and of the peasant

Not that it was by any means a cheap metal to buy, but a "set" or "garnish" of pewter, as it was called, when once lought was generally tencled with assiduous and ewen loving care, and would last for many generations. The use of the metal, with slight variations of the composition, was not confined to Great Brite: $n$ and the Continent, but was, nol is still, made in nearly all, ilised countries of the old $x$ rld. The metal of Japan gow ender the name of "antimon? ware", the pieces being often ry beautiful in design and fecling. Chma produces a quality which, though not particularly sood, owing to the quantity of lead in the composition, is still pewter, and many quaint and beautiful shapes may be found which hail from that country.

On the Continent the craft of the pewterer still fourishes to a certain extent, not always legitimately, it is to be foared, for he has in many cases come across the old moulds, and from these he casts his wares, often in very base metal indeed, palming them off upon the British and American tourists, throust the medium of the antiquarian shops and the rag markets which are to be found in many of the old continental towns.

In England and Scotland the craft or trade is confinced to one or two old established firms, though I gather that not one of them deals or works solely in the metal. There is still a Company of Pewterers in I ondon, which has a hall and offices in the City, but, alas ! its glory has departed, the hall being let to a firm of hatters; I think I am right in saying that the last Parliamentary return could only show the existence of two working members, and, of course, like so many of the old companies, it has no jurisdiction over the workers at the craft at the present day. We have in our muscums evidence that the metal dates back at least to Roman times, and it is a matter of dispute whether its manufacfure anl use were not inherited from the Greeks.

That sacramental ressels were marle of it, and that this was protested against strongly from time to time lis the Catholic Church on the gromod that pewter was not a precious enoush material from which to fashion the holy vessels, we learn fom the fact that the coumbil of Rheims, 847 , and the Symul of Canterthry in the thirteenth centurs, forbate its use entirely in the making of the chalice and paten. On the Cominent, at any rate, the use of pewter for Ewharistic vessels seems to have been common enorgh in later times, for lip to the time of the Revolution in france it was the custom to keep a set of vessels mate of the metal for everylay use; and in many churches in leelgium this is the case to the present clay.

The pewterers of laris were the first to come into prominence, and the l'evterers' Guils of that city seems to have been the most powerful from the four-in metal or stone that his castings required lifle or no finishing after leaving the mould. It was epon the rules of the laris Guilt that the fomiom inmpany foumded their own regulations.

Germany had many pewterers in the midtle ages. and there are still a quantity of veasels, though a aily of a late rlate, on le got in that country. B ; itum was at one time famous for its pewterers, who cen. in such cities as (ihent, Mons, and Bruges, th have formed a large proportion of the population $130 t$ none of these conntries couthl equal England the production of the metal, and we find that, as the

In later times the lork l'ewterers, in turn, took those of the fondon Company as their model, and it is frem the rules of these two suikly that we are able to karn somethins alout the I.onfon comprony, the great lire having destroyced minn of their records and tourh-plates.

Britelly, the chicef of the ruibs are these: tworgualities of pewter only were allowed to be matere, "a fine and coarse," the latter to comtain not more than so per ecent. of lead. l'ewter goods for sale in thecity wereassayed, and the weight of pritcipal ressels was fixed. Warclens were appuinted by the Compaty to search for had work and spurions metal. Which was confiseaterd, the importa(i) ol ol the metal from almal being prohibiterl; and no foreigner was allowil to practise or be taught the craft in Great Bhitain, nor an Englishman abornal. Every pewterer as to mark his vessels with a touch or private mark whieh mark was also to he stamped on a spect plate, and kept in the custorly of the Compan! Amongst the rules of the Cork Guild there are several relating w the proper care and use of the monlils, which were the common property of the members, no workman even leing permitue: the use of them uniess he could prove himself efteient at the raft. As I have belore mentionet, there were Pewterers Companies in all the large cities, the chief beins Lamom, York, and linlinhurgh. The Guile in the lather city was allied to the larse mother corpration of the Hammer-men, which compriseri all the trodes that used a hammer in their work. Their rules were very similar to those of the lomdon and York (iompanis. To the collector of pewter the marks stamped on the back and other parts of the vemols hate been more or less a sualed book. for the losis of the touch-plates and the lack of intiomation on the subjert have put obstacles in the way of many who might wish to know the meaning of these marks. addition of the worl "Filinhurgh" on a ribbon underneath. Another and older stamp has the worls "Haril Netal" on the ribon. In Belgium there is w he foumd a form of this stamp, with the aclilition of a small shield in the centre of the rose, with the bearing of a lion rampant, and umberneath the crown two or three initials.

Upon liritish pewter there are generally to be found the following stamps:-
(1) The license stamp, a crowned rose, or others describerl later,
(2) The pewterer's own private mark;
(3) Imitation hall-marks, these leing often the pewterer's initials set on each side with such devices as the leoparits head or a small expamerl rose, each set in a small shield.

These marks, no douls, showed the quality of the metal, or possibly the date. The following are some of the private pewter marks of pewlerers working in London in 1669 :-

Samuct laikson, a lamp and flag, with the letters "s. I." on either side, all within a bearled ircte of the size of a threepenny piece.

Robert /aras, a blaxing star, with the etters "R. I." on either side, all within a small I adell oral.

Thomas Dickcuson, a griffin's hearl couper on a wreath, and with a crown abowe, and the etters
"T. I on either side, all within a beacled circle the sit ul a threeprenny piece.
I.w" , /C Her, a shield with stiff feathers mantlins, and chrged with three anchors placed two and one, all in : plain oval, above which are two labels, one abowe the other, bearing the words "I ondini" and -1.. | - сr."
Kul/" Marsh, a bird and "R. M." and the date, in a haded circle less than a threctany piece.
kidph /holl, two naked hor, with the letters "R. H." on erther side, the date beweon the boys, all in a beaded rircle less than a threcpenny pices.
. Wïholes Kilk, a hand graspins: thped rose, and the initials. N. $K^{-}$." on either side, all within a beaded circle ahout the size of a threepenny pincs.
finamis lect, three stamps, all hearing a pomegranate, the finat a medium-sized oval, with - tiff laf or feather mantling on either vick: above appears the name "Fra. lea." The two "ther punches were very small: the shle reircular, with the promesranate in the centre, and "I.I." on either side; the wher, smaller still, with the ame device and initials. Each of thene smaller punches had a baaled rim.

Thamas Stome, a crowned portenlis with the letters "F.s." on wither side, all within a beaded circle about the - ide of a sixpence.

Wenomest the pewterers of a later late in tidinhurgh the nam. of Willam Scott and his am. 'n William Scott, were, perhaps, the best known. The tamps were a bird perched on a globe and a flus at eath sitle with the full name, "William sont : the second was merejy the name. "W. son

It license stamps of the Companies were often mery the city arms. Of the rownell rose I have hefu proken. The Erlinhurgh Company had from time ime rlifferent starms : the first, about 1600 , being a figure like a St. Anslrew's cross, with initals on either side ; the second simply a castle; the third a variation of the castle, with the ardition of initials and dates. This stamp runs from 1610 to $176+$ and onwarils, varying slightly in character. it thistle. with the word "Edinburgh" underneath, is another form; also a large thistle with the contraction " Ed." unilerneath.

Amongst the filasgow stamps are the city arms: a true with a fish holding a ring in its mouth, with or without the addition of dates and initials, all in a small shickl. Amongst the quality marks a crowned " $x^{\prime \prime}$ desis. nated the finest metal.

As there is at the present time a large quantity of foreign pewter, much of which is Belgian, offered for sale in this country, the following list of town marks may not prove uninterenting:-

Firuses, a crowned (iothic b in a shicld.
. Ahtecerp, an ant.
Ghent, a tigure of St. Michadel, sot in at small circle, the maker's name rumming round the top of the circle.
firussels. an antel flying, the makers name beins placed as at Ghent.

All the foregoing marks are placed generally on the batk of the ware, such as plates. cte. : on the front will otten be found initials, and sometimes coats of arms. These are the initials or arms of the owner of the sorvice.

All but the more wealthe collectors must lian contens themselves with the ware of the seventerenth. eighteenth, and early part of the nineteenth centuries as anything mate hefore that time may he regarted as really valuable. As a rule British pewter ware is thistinguished by the simplicity of its design. display. ins in such articles as plates, dishes. etc., the minimum of ornament, except in late work, when it was much more freely used.

work. There we find plates, enc., with scalloped eilges and often covered with incised ornament of an elaborate kind. Ornament obtainerl by casting was very plentiful in this country, nut often very pleasing, though some of the smaller articles, such as binitirs, are very charming. Pewter pots in England and Scotland took different forns, and had more ornamental mouldings upon them than other ware, the Sooth "Tappit Hens," of which three are the proper set, being very quaint in design. They are now fast hecomins rare. Teapors, sugar lasins, and cream jugs are still common enough, though the later ones are often tor rococo in design, those of the Gueen Anne perioxl being the best. The same may lee sail alosut canllesticks, the Queen Anne shape being distinguishable by a pear-shaperl bulge in the middle of the stalk. Salt cellars, mustard ami pepper pents lined with blue glass often pierced in beautiful pallerns, are we met with in most antiquarian shopls. These are a few of the articles which the collector huys. of course, there were dozens of others made from the metal, those made by Messrs. Jas. Dixm and Soms, and Messrs. Vickers, of Sheffiell, being amongst the best late work. It has always been a vexed question amongst collecturs whether the collection should be leane or nut. I am emphatically in favour of the ci aning, for in so doing you preserve your collection. It is hest done with Brookes' soap and whiskey l:r the first polishing, finishing off with more soap and water, and a final polish with whitening. Ol, atinate specimens may have the first dirt taken off them by a soaking in a bath of pickle, composed of fresh slakerl lime and sorla. The collection polisheld and displayed against old oak is a sight beautiful to behold.

Tu those who do not know its compusition, it may be interesting to learn that tin is the chief metal in pewter; this, with the addition of a very little leal, copper, or antimony, forms the metal. At one time a metal was made containing often as much as one half silver, and was solld as silver pewter, but pieces now are comparatively rare, and coliectors may well say they have a prize if a piece of this sort forms part of their collection.

In conclusion, let me give these words of advice to collectors: lass by nothing in the metal, however late in date, as long as its shape is good, for the craft died before the machine came to displace hand labour, and therein lies much of the charm of the old work.

EGilISH BRACKET CIOCKS OF THE SEVENTEENTH AND EIGHTEENTH CENTLRIES BY ( C C. COLALAN

Tue collector of works of art is a fortunate indivilual if he possesses the three cardinal virnts of patience, a knowledge of the subjert in whith be is imeresterl. and a well-filleal purse.

There is, of course. scarcely different persons have different tastes, and, I may add, difkrent opportuni tics, some turn their attention to one thing and some to another, with the result that we have a long array of collectors and a host of thinges collectect. ramsing from such priceless ohjocts as are sathered tofrether in the warldfamous Walate Collection to al bums of crests and picture post-cards. Thus. though the collections made vary much in heauty and in real bals. . yot they are mosily of comsiderable interest and affer chelless sratification to the enthrasiast, buoth in the allection and the pussossion of the praticular wily : which forms his holber.

Undoubtedly the finest specinens of these works of art were made at the end of the seventeenth and the heginning of the eighteenth centuries. and undubtedly also these specimens are now most difficult to procure. When they are occasionally met with they command very high prices. but the fortumate pessessor may rely upul it that if he has bought wisely and well his capital is safely investe 1 .

The collectur of these clocks has. boweter. like the cullectur of books, to be very wary and tu make sure that his clock is in first state, for to be of real and marketable value it must he, to all iments and purposes. in its ariginal condition. Of course. clocks, heing made primarily for the useful purpuse of indicaling time and mo merely for ormament. were (unlike many other things) necessarily the sul) ject from time to time of apair. and it is this fart that makes if difficult to meet with a really immaculate specimen of an early Fongish chock. There are. in fact, scarcely any whose frame and construction have emirely whitumi the ravages of time ant the repairer. hut still many din exist which are practically original clocks. and these and these only should form the subjects of collection.
" Dracket" or "pedestal" rocks were made. of course, in intinite variety of shapc, siঞc: : 1 pharances and ornamentation, and the makies of thene dooks were abo in intinite varict, as a reference to the list : mpromed (1) Mr. Britson's willthawn work on whe chocks and watches will show. some of these names. however, stand out precominenty as makers ai the wery highest elats of work, and amonsat whers, William Wehnoer.

No. It-bate vew of so. i., of Exchange Ally (sic), William Cratk, of Rosal Exchange, Iondon, and Charles Circton, of Fleet Street, were eertainly masters of their art, as the clocks which 1 propose to describe shortly in this paper will, I think, conclusively prowe.

The most interesting and valuable of these pieces are without doubt those which chime, and this is a feature which shoukd be borme in mind by the collector. Chiming clocks, when procurable, command much hisher prices than clocks which strike only; but the atmost care shoula be taken by the collector to satisfy himself that the clock is wne which possesses the original chiming movement, for in many instances this feature has been arlileal, and the clack is, therefore, not a "first eilition. As a rule, there is not much diffoculty in ascertaining the facts of the case. An expert would, of course. have no besitation in arriving at a decision in the matter.

Another puint which presents more lifficulty is as to the hands of these clocks. These hanols are in many cases heantifully designe: and pietred, but it is perhaps almost impossible fo be certain that the brass or ormolu ornamentation, too, has in many cases been restored, sometimes palpally, and often so cleverly as almost to defy detection ; but these are matters of no very great concern. If the clock is practically an original one and has not been made up or "faked," the collector need not fear to possess it.

The finest of the English bracket clocks are distinguished by very handsome cases, made in every variety of wool, though the best are generally fown in mahogany, some in elomy or elonized wood, and some few in a reneer of tortoise-shell. The omamentation of these cases is also of a more or 'ess elaborate character; but as a rule consiflerable taste was shewn in this direction, and the cases are not often found to be owerloaded in clocks of an carly date, though they often were at a bater period.

The dials of these clocks are in many instances of very beautiful design, and the workmanship and ornamentation are of the greatest possible interest to the collector. Most of the earlier bracket clocks were made with square dials, as were also the lons ase clocks of the same period, whike those of at later date were furnished with an arch. Opinions may possibly differ as to the relative merits of the two shapes so far as the dial itself is concerned, but as the arched dial involved a corresponding arch in the case of the clock, I think there can be but litte doubt that the general appearance of the pisec is distinctly improserl. Whether the dial is square or archerl, it is of brass, with the circle silvered, and containing the numerals in Roman characters. A special feature of the dials is the ornamentation in the spandrels, or corners. These corners are invariably fille! in with most beautifully morlellet designs in gilded brass, the earliest and simplest heing Cirinling Cibions's "Cherut," design, while those of a later period are of a much more Waborate character. Anotiner special feature of these clocks is the back plate. The carliest of English bracket clocks have these plates wery trautifully engraved, sometimes with floral desims. sometimes with birds and other animals, and they generally contain the name of the maker. When the clocks have these engraved back plates they are gencrally furnished with glazed derors. through which the workmanship may be seen. I: later times the engraving was omitted, and wor fen doors took the place of glass, ones at the bat of the clock.

The accompanying illustrations, taken from pl tographs, give specimens of clocks in the posse ion of the writer, and a short description of these :ill.

I ti nk, enable the reader to form some idea of ${ }_{2} \mathrm{~L}_{\mathrm{l}}$. workmanship and appearance.
fre clock illustrated by No. i. is a fine specimen of :illiam Webster's.work. It is similar in many respects to the picce made by William venting the intrusion of dust. Each of these clocks contains the name of the maker on a silvered plate in the centre of the arch of the dial, on either side of which phate is a circle, one containiog the regulating hand which communicates with a lever at the back, ty which the pendulum is raised or lowered, as desired. This apparatus will be seen in No. ii., which represents the back of the clock now being described. The other circle eontains the "strike silent" hand. In the elocks illusirated the dials contain a date indicator, which acts automatically, and in the inner circle, just below the numeral Xif., there is a curverl slot, through which is seen the disc forming the projection of the per:itulum. These discs are often very prettily ens ived, and being attached to the pendulum they trat visibly backward and forward with its movemer. .

$\therefore$ a. iii. and iv. illustrate a cloch made by Charles Cire $m$, of whom mention has been made as an em: at maker. He was apprenticed to Lionel $W_{y}$ : in 1662 , and was Master of the Clockmakers' Conepany in 1 ;or. This clock is a good example of t . carly work, and is an excellent specimen of the fuare-faced variety. It is enclosed in a very rich case of polished ebony, and the engrasing upon the dial and upon the back frame is exceedingly rich. This clock strikes the hours automatically, but has no chiming movement. The striking can be repeated at pleasure by means of a cord which is provided for the purpose. This feature is to be found in clocks which do not strike or chime automatically:

No. r. represents a striking and chiming clock made by William Creak, temp. ${ }^{17+0.1760}$, whose name has been already mentioned. This eminent London maker was clearly a master of his art, as the clocke made by him abundantly show. It will toe seen that the dial of this clock, as also that illustrated by No. i., is arched. The case is of dark polished mahogany, and the clock, while possessing many of the features and characteristics already mentioned, has its original striking and chiming movement. The striking and chiming takes phace automatically; the chiming at the quarters is on cight bells, and as the chimes vary at cach quarter the effect is wery pleasing.

There are many other interesting points comnected with these most beautiful and useful works of ant, but on these it is impossible to dwell within the limits of a short article. Enough has, it is hoped, been said to direct the attention of connoisseurs to the study and collection of English hacket clocks.

C HINESE SNUFFBOTMIES B HERBERT W. L. WAY

 to be a receptacle for dust H - would have turned it the other way up," said Charles lamb when a friend passed him a snuffibus.The quaint humour of the briiliant exsayist linds no favour in China: one has only to wateh a mandarin taking snuff from his bottle of jade or crystal to sece that he is performing one of the essential ceremonies of life. With characteristie solemuty he grasps the bottle in his keft hand, then with his right be slowly extracts the stuff with the little spoon attached to the stopper (elosily resembing the stopper and spoon of a cayenne pepper bottic in an English cruet stand), and places it on the second joint of his left hand in readiness to be snuffed. The Chinaman without his snuff-bottle would be as painfully fallen on evil days as the British workman without his clay or the Teuton student without his bect.

Among the high officials there is great rivalry in the matter. Just as Western women will appratise one anothers furs and feathers, will follow the fashion kader with heartburning and extranelinary tenacity, will light for superiority in laces and jewels, so these Griental statesmen vie with each other in the work! manship, material, and design of their snufthotles. They are handed down as hearlooms from generation to generation, and while in office the owners will not on any consideration part with them. From which statement it will readily appear that the making of a collection has an astonishing, and my own experience with its inevitable bias leads me to say a unique, fascination.

Equal to the dificulty of getting them is the charm and beauty of the bottles; they are to be found in endless variety of material and form, no two are alike, and the workmanship of the most costly is exceedingly delicate, especially when one makes due allowance for the hardness of the stone in many instances and the primitive instruments by which it is manipulated, for the greatest care is necessary in hollowing out the bottle from the tiny hole at the top.

I have never seen in any other river bed such a variety of beatiful pebbeses as may be found there.

The stopper of the snuff-bottle is generall: in violent eontrast to the colour of the botle; semetimes it will be made of tourmaline, carnelian, or mother-o'-pearl, sometimes of cairngorm or 1' kin glass, cither plain or set in gilded brass or siter. A crious specimen in my collection-a double cairngorm rrystal with rutik crystals included, cut into two diagonal snuff-bottes -has one stopper of blue tluor spar and the other of green jade. Another beautiful bottle carved from a hard silicious conglomerate or "plum-pudding stonc," as it is called in England, has a stopper of green jade.

It is when the official is expelled from office and mones becomes, scarce that the snuff-lottles find their way to the universal Chinese pawnshop. Then comes the collector's chance, and if he is in no hurry and can devote time to the hunting of his quarry he may do fairly well. Perhaps he will cast covetous eyes on a bottle which he considers worth thirty taels; when the pawnbroker asks (as lie will) one hundred taels he will promptly offer ten, to meet with scorn and contempt. After that he will receive a daily visit from the dealer till at the end of ten days or so the coveted treasure has been purchased at a cost probably of thirty-five or forty taets. I have myself, when engaged in this amiable sport, been told by pawnbrokers in Syechuan and Yu-nan that choice bottes have lain in their shops for fitty years and more, as there is no market for them in those remote provinces far from the reach of collectors. Probably if they took the bottles to Pekin they could get ten times the price I gave for them from wealthy officials or Europuan collectors, but the dangers of the tedious overland route prevent that in most cases; the journey takes at least two months ach way owing to the wretched condition of the Chinesc roads. The only merchants of Syechuan who are used to dealing with European traders are those of Chungking, as that is the navigable limit of the Yangtse river, and even there an enormous percentage of goorls is lost in the terrible rapids of the Yangtse gorges.

I ohtained a great many of my most highly prized snuff-bottles from Cheng-tu-fu, the chief town in Western China, which is situated in the centre of the most fertile plain in the world, and takes ten days to reach from Chungking overland; it contains more curio and pawnshops than any other town in China, except conghonerate, resembling SOUTII AFKICAN " BANKFIS," WITJ JADE STOIJER Nanking and Pekin. I procured some very fine snuff-lottles from the former, as also from the native city at Shanghai, Nan Chang Fu, Kukiang, Chungking, and other citics.

The illustrations accompanying the text give some idea of a few choice specimens in my collection ; but however good the engraver's work may les, half-tone must fail to consey to the reader an appropriate idea of the exquisite polish and varied sivid colouring of the origimal botules.

Amons the high officials there is great rivalry in the matter. Just as $W$ estern women will apprase one another's furs and feathers, will follow the fashion leader with heartburning and extraordinary tenacity, will light for superiority in laces and jewels, so these Oriental statesmen vie with each other in the work! manship, material, and design of their snuth-hottes. They are handed down as heorlooms from generation to generation, and while in office the owners will not on any consideration part with them. From which statement it will readily appear that the making of a collection has an astonishing, and my own experience with its inevitable bias leads me to say a unique, fascination.

Equal to the difficulty of getting them is the charm and beauty of the bottles; they are to be found in endless variety of material and Portraits at the New Gallery the New Gallery. The unsigned portrait of Kichard III. (see fase 197) wals painted when the change from tempera to oil as the medium was being effected, and of even greater importance, seeing to what it Jed, the change from pancel to canas. There seems to have been nothing of English work during that time that could be compared for a moment with the arhievements of Memling or the Van Eycks, or with those of Raphacl's precursors in Italy, and this can hardly be English work. There are fathomless depths of feeling in the finely drawn face of this king. The sentiment, and feeling for feclins, that is lacking in Holbeins work we hate in abundance berc, and no more wonderful eyes have been painted than those which sheed light on this canvas. 'The interesting portrait of Henry VII. (on this fetse) belones, of rourse to the same period; it is aloo by an unknown painter.

It would be impossible for oncot. Hollein's sehool (w) be other than absolutely truthful, and the portratis of Edward VI. lack nothing in this respect, but whatever the king had of soul seems to have been sought and found by Gwillim Stretes, the painter of the portrait reproduced on page 200. Compared with this beautiful work the portraits of lilizabeth in the next room are felt to be highly-wrought fashion pates; historical documents, doubtless, and as arful as is consistent with absolute accuracy; but as much may be said of any mechanical drawing, and there is litte to praise in such work. Her portraits reval none of her character, whereas those of her sister Mary, cither as child or Queen, are disclosures of the malignity forming her portion which determined the choice of the epithet "bloody" when her his. tory had to be written. We must rot be blinded by prejudice to the qualit: of her portraits, however. and those numbered 73 and 75 , attributed to Antonio More and l.ucas de Heere (see pase 108). are amongst the finest in the collection.

This rolume had been offered for sale on a previous orcasion at Messrs. luttick and Simpson's, and we do not recollect any mention being made of the Petrarch interest. It is, in the first place, as improbable a book as can well be conceived to have been in possession of Petrarch, and his ownership seems to depend on the reputed similarity of certain MS . notes to writing preserved in a MS. of Virgil at Milan claimed as his. The circumstances conmected with the library and other personal appurtenames of Petrarch are very obscure and debatable; but it is senerally understood and arlmitted that in 1362 he presented a few books to Venice, and that after his death his effects were dispersed by auction at ladua. About two centuries elapsed before any steps were taken by the Venetian Government to erect a library to accommodate the literary treasures which had accumulated by gift, more especially those of Cardinal Bessarion and Cardinal Grimani; and it is extremely questionable whether at that dite any portion of the slender Petrarch donation surviver. Unless it be the Virgil above mentioned, nothing authentic from this source is recognisable, but in Hazlitt's Venctian Republic three MSS. are specified as existing, but as being of dubious character, and two others which have not been remored, one of them a Dante presented to the pret by Boccaccio. The lot was allowed to go for E.7, which was tantamount to a repurliation by all gond judges of the reputed protanalice.

On the $13^{\text {th }}$ May, 1680 , Evelyn again writes :-" 1 was at the funcral of old Mr. Shish, master-shipwright of his Majesty's Yard here, an honest and remarkable man, and his death a public loss for his excellent success in building ships (though altogether illiturate),

The accompanying illustration shows a chamber organ now in the possession of Mr. W. Howard Head, which is remarkable alike for its

An early

 Seventeenth Century Organ beauty of form, its singularity of construction, and its historical interest.This Organ has always been known as "Quecn Elizaleth's Organ," but it was the opinion of its last owner, the late Mr. J. Snowden Henry, M. ${ }^{\text {P., of Fast Den, Bonchurch, }}$ Iske of Wight, that, "having been in the Isle of Wight so long, if it had a Royal owner, it is more likely to have been the Princess Elizabeth-a daughter of Charles I. -who died at Carisirooke." There is, however, no evidence that it ever lelonged to a member of the Royal family.

It will be seen that the organ bears the date 1602 , and also a quotation from the ${ }^{1}$ 50th I'salm, of which the English translation is: "lraise the Jord with stringed instruments and organ." It is probably of Fl umish origin, and appears to, have been specially made for the then Earl of Montrose, whose armsare prominent in the decoration, and whese initial "f" (for John (iraham) is so treated in the ornamentation of the case, that the monogram forms an "al" for "Mentrose," under a coronet. This mones gram appears twice on the upper portion of the case, and alternates with a rejre scotation of a human head on the front of the keys.

On the death of the late Mr. J. Snowden Fuary, the orgin was lent by his executors to south Kensington Museum, where it atracted auch attention for some considerable time. The wiand up of the Trust, however, necessitated the sate of the instrument, and it was sold at Christie's for a large sum to an art dealer, who bicl guineas to the peands offered by the representative of the Museum. Mr. Head, who subsequently came into possession of the organ, has taken in hand its restoration, which was unfortunately to some extent necessary, inasmuch as many of the pipes were ladly worm-eaten, and it was with the utmost difficulty that some of them could be rendered fit for use.

A few words as to the construction of the organ may not be amiss. The compass of the instrument is from E to $\mathrm{C}-45$ notes, and the stops are "Stopled Diapason," "Flute," and "Regal," which latter only extends from b to C-26 notes. There is also a tremolo, which, in conjunction with the "Regal" stop, gives very much the effect of a " Vox Humana." The organ measures 5 ft .9 ins, high b y 3 ft . 6 ins. wide by a foot 9 ins. deep. There is no draw stop action of the usual description, but the slides are worked direct, a carsed knob being affixed to cach end.

The pipes are of wood, and are most clatorately carved in such a way as to rescmble, so far as was possible, the somelt thistic. P'rolably the original organ had but two stops, the "Stopped Diaparon" and the "Flute," the "Regal" |xings aditad as an afterthousht, possibly bectore the instrument lefi the workshop. and orkmanship are practically identical with those of $t$ • other two stops.

A U.W of the large pipes in the "Stopped lliapason are of oak and built square, but all the others are lound, being bored out of solid pear-wood, with onk i fect. The pipes are by no means all alike, but there is a very distinct similarity between the various designs and schemes of ornamentation.
'T:at portion of each pipe which is near the mouth has been left square, and the front has been cut away to make room for the cap. Not only the body of each pipe, but also cach cap, mouth, and stopper is carved. Outside the case, at the back, it will the found that the "Regal" stop has been treated in much the same manner, the tubes being attistically carved and fixed intu square woolen blocks, which, in their turn, are let into the upper baarel. The whole of this stop is let into one board, a method which, we believe, somewhat differs from modern practice.

When the organ came into the posscssion of its present owner it had atfixed to it, inside the case, a wooden label bearing the following inseriptionand the date on the outside of the case was 1592. Mr. Head, howeter, rejects, and has removed, this inscription, and has altered the date outside the ease to f Go2, as, he believes, it orisinally stood.

Fine Wood Carving history. They were, until a few yuars ago, in the church built by the Knights Hospitallers at Aschelia in Cyprus. In 1888 , when Mr. I). (i. Hogarth visited Cyprus for archeological purposes, this church contained a remarkatle pulpit

There is now to be seen in London an extremely fine specimen of old Argentan lace made for a royal cot cover, probably towards the ent of A Piece the seventeenth century. It measures of Old 52 ins. ly 50 ins. The design conLace sists of rococoframed compartments, fillerl in with bunches of fowers, which in sume cases rest upon a riseat gromml. I : spuare is in [erfect condition, having passed projucting from the wall, a rood screen, and a baldachino, all of wood (apparently chestnut), chaborately carved. The pulpit was apparently made out of an okler frie\%e, which must at some time have been remowed from its place, but the sereen and babdachino seem to have been in their original condition.

In Mr. Hogirth's published account of his tour be found on pages $4 . \mathbf{B}^{-4}$ an account of the ehurch and its carvings by Mr. R. Elsey Smith, who attributes the carving to the early part of the sixtement century. As will be sesen, it is Remaisance in chameter, but shows traces of cotbic influtnec. 'phe large panels forming the tricae of the sereen are the pancls of the pulpit, and the rest of the sereen is formed out of the baldachino. It is sad to read that, when Mr. Jogarth and Mr. Elsey Smith saw the carving about thirteen years ago at Aschelia, it was in almost perfect preservation, and thus it might have been today but for the vandalism of an English resident in Cyprus and the incredible conduct of those who ought to have been its guardians. For the local Greck bishop actually removerl the carving from the church and sold it to a Mr. Gr. W. Williamson, from whose hands it passed into those of a bank manager at Cyprus. This gentleman brought the carving to England and offered it to South Kensington Museum, but the Muscum would not pay his price.

The carving was then left for ten years in the corner of a city warehouse, where it was found by Mr. Rider Haggard. By that time it had fallen into two or three hundred pieces. Mr. Haggard sold it to a friend, for whom it has been made into a sercen by the Misses Woollan, of Brook Street, under the advice of Mr. R. P. Spiers. The owner has given the Nisses Woollan leave to show it for a short time to anyone who may be interested.

 New Year.At Christie's, on January 88 th , a few interesting English water-colours were offered, including works by Cattermole, David Cox, and leter De Wint. 'The latter's Kirkstall Abbey, Yorkshire, a very good (xample from the Quilter Collection ( 1875 ), fetched 100 guineas, and $A$ Scene in Sherwood Forest, by Wavid Cox, from the same collection, 55 guineas. There were also several small works by Birket Foster in his usual style, that is to say, with a wealth of unimportant detail and a hardness of contour that make his original water-colours almost indistinguishable from the chromo-lithographs which reproduce them. His work is at present very much overrated, so that one was not surprised to see $5^{8}$ guineas paid for his small Landscape arith Sheep, Children, and HZ̈ndmill.
The following Saturday brought an instructive wries of works, mostly sketches, in oils and watercolours, by lavid Roberts. None were of very fine quality or great importance, but the interest of the series lay in the fact that it covered the greater portion of the artist's carcer, from $183^{\text {i }}$ to 1864 , the year of his death. The best of the water-colours was the Grand Entrance to the Temple of Laxor, which fitched 45 guineas, but a number of slight though Hever studies went for very small prices, varying Irom Er to zo guineas. Among the oil paintings a view of St. Andrea's, N.R., from the Sea, painted in 1864 , an important canvas, but of no great artistic merit, reached only 60 guineas. At the ame sale a Church Interior, by the modern Dutch winter T. Bosboom, was sold for 294 guineas, alhough it cannot be ranked with this artist's best work.
The great mame of lirang Hals shed its lustre foon the sale of February ist, and attracted a large umber of people. When the Portratit of a Cientle'an, which we reproduce, was placed upon the sel, there fell over the assembly that curious esh of expectancy which invariably precedes sensational bidding. An offer of 300 guincas set the ball rolling, and in a very few minutes the sum of 3,600 guineas was reached, and the picture knocked down to Messrs. Agnew. It was sold by the executors of the late H. W. Cholmley, Ess., of Howsham Hall, York, whose mother, it is reported, purchased the portrait about a century ago for $£ 20$. The sitter, a man of no very striking appearance, but with a strangely sad expression in the eyes, is slighty turned to the left; he wears a black dress and cloak with a white collar and large black hat; he holds his gloves in the left hand, and his right hand rests upon his hip. The canvas measures 31 ins. by 26 ins. The quality is not of the finest, and the picture was probably painted in the latter part of the artist's life. It is far, for instance, from possessing the wonderful dash, the incomparable subtety of modelling and colouring of the portrait of a man, by the same artist, at present exhibited at Burlington House by Mr. Arthur sanderson ; yet it bears many characteristics of the master of Haarlem, and is a good example of his inimitable technique, in which he seemed to combine the methods of his contemporarics, Rembrandt and Rubens, without losing anything of his own personality.

The limaz Hals was undoubtedly the clow of the sale, but there were several other items of interest, notably, an excellent example of lieter Codde, representing the Interior of a Guard Room: a cavalier in slashed white dress and a large hat is playing tricktrack with a gontkman in red coat and lace ruff, while an officer, with cloak and hetmet, stands by smoking a pipe and watching the game. The quality of the picture fully justified the price, $\ddagger 20$ guineas. Gerhard van Honthorst ( $1590-1656$ ), a painter who spent some time in England, and is lost known in this conntry by his numerous portraits of the unfortunate Quect of Bohemia, daughter of James I., was represented by a truly magnificent work, whose only fault is its enormous size (f it. 10 ins. by 9 ft. 3 ins.). The subject is the Adoration of the lagi, very similar in treatment to the one in Florence, which is recognised as the artist's masterpiece. Notwithstanding the merits of the prainting and the wonderful effects of light and shade, it only reached 145 guineas owing to its unwicldy jroportions.

Among Iluteh landscapes only two need be noted, works of the two Ruysdaels. liy the more famous Jacoh there was a pretty, though very small panel, A Riser Scone, with trees and church, and windmill beyond, an angler in the foreground (Smith's Catalegue Raisomi, No. 25, page 32), which brousht 195 gumeas; whist his unck Salomon's Voody Landsape, with a wagon and figures on a rond, of grool quality, but not one of the favourite river seenes, Went for 78 guincas.

An unfinished sketeh by Sir Joshua Reyolds, A Mother and Infant, was the most interestim: work of the Early English School sold on this dey. Though very slight, this study is full of gracerul charm. and is well worth the 310 guineas paid for it.

The Portratt of a Lady, by Sir Henry Rachurn. was not a very fawourable example of the master: the dress is of a very dark green shade, almost blach and the entire scheme of the picture is extremed dark, the only relief, except the face, being a naro white muslin frill; nor was the painting in the finc state of preservation, so that 820 guineas seems a fa price to have paid for it. 'I'he halflength presentatio in :rofile of George Cumberland, a boy of fourteen, in n lshipman's uniform, was correctly attributed to C orge Komney, and was bought by Mr. Fairfax Marray for 185 guineas; and there was an attractive si wall whole length Portrait of John Cook, Ess., of A raich, in red coat, seated on a stile, by Sir Wim. 1 chey ( 75 guineas).

It may be well to mention, before leaving the sabject of this sale, that the so-called Gabriel Metsu, I Visit to the Nursery, concerning which the atalogue (No. ro8) quoted a long description from smith's Catalogue Raisomé, was not the original picture mentioned in that work. As explained by dhe auctioneer when putting up the picture, the origgimal is on canvas, whereas this one was a panel. Quite apart from this difference, it was evident from the painting itself that it could not be the work of Hetsu ; the bad drawing of the hands and the general fl:thess of the entire picture denounced it, even to moderate connoisseurs, as a none too excellent copy. Secelless to add that it did not fetch a high price, but was bought in at 90 guineas. The original is prohatbly worth from $£ 3,000$ to $£ 4,000$.

But the finest array of spurious pictures which we hate seen for some time past appeared in the same rowis the following week. They were probably a consignment from Belgium, and comprised examples altributed to the great masters of the larrbizon School-Corot, Daubigny, Troyon, Jacque, Diaz, as well as Ziem and Boudin. Perhaps the most barefarced was the so-called Troyon, $A$ White Con in a facture, which not only bore a false signature, but also a forged stamp of the artist's sale. No one, however, scems to have been deceived, and it may 1 whoubted whether any one of these "fakes" found a buger, cen at the low prices at which they were knoeked down.

It this same sale, there appeared two important works by the late Mr. T. S. Cooper, R.A., dated ropectively 1860 and 1877 . They are in the artist's usual style, and differ little in subject from a very lurse number of his works. Sheep-Shearing realised 310 guineas, and Six Cowes on the Bank of a Riner 300 guineas. To the same category of paintings, onc we fear destined to incur a serious depreciation ir the not very distant future, belongs Sheep in the If. hlants, by R. Ansdell, R.A., 1873 , which fetched 219 guincas.
"here is but little to say this month concerning th. sales of engravings. Proofs and first states of Priats mezzotint portraits after Sir Joshua Reynolds, and, in a lesser degree, after $H_{1}$ mor and Romney, continue to fetch several times the price for which these masters were glad during their lifetime to paint the original pictures. The large number which have now been thrown upon the market, and even the frequent recurrence of examples of the same print, seem to have but little effect on their commercial value. The finest specimens are, however, no doubt being absorbed by collectors, which may explain the fact that as yet the sensational records established last season have neither been equalled nor approached. Lady Bamiffylde, one of the rarest and most beautiful of 'T. Watson's engravings after Sir Joshua, of which a first state fetched 880 guineas last year, was bought for $£ 294$ at Christie's on January 1 gth ; and Mrs. Alingrton as the Comic Muse, by J. Watson, also after Reynolds, first state before any letters, reached Eizo. A week later Sir Joshua was again an casy first with his Mrs. Beresford, Laid Towonshend, axd I/rs. Gardiner, by T. Watson, first state, which realised $£ 20.415 \mathrm{~s}$. Hopponer's Elisaleth, Countess of Mexborough, by W. Ward, first state, sold for £ 94 ros. Again, at Liverpool, at Messrs. Branch © I.cete's sale of the Hornby collection on January ${ }_{2}$ 3rd, Mrs. Pelham fieding the Ciaickens, by W. Dickinson, after Sir J. Reynoids, etched letter proot, futched 240 guineas. In the same sale, an engraver's proof before all states of Sir Thomas Lawrence's Nature, by Samuel Cousins, was disposed of for yo guineas, and Lady Durham, same painter and engraver, private plate, signed by the engraver, for 86 guineas.

Colour-prints have been comparatively less numerous of late than they were at the beginning of the season. However, Morland's well-known pair, A Visit to the Boarding School and A Visit to the Child at Nurse, appeared once more at Christie's on January 15 th, and realised 130 guineas; whilst among coloured portraits the highest price was reached by Jane, Conntess of Harrington, and Children, by Hartolozzi, after Reynolds, £147, on February 5 th.

The market-value of books is dominated to a very great extent by fashion. To no other agency can the extraordinary and spasmodic fluctuaBooks tions which are continually occurring be ascribed. To many, not to say most, prople this unsettled state of things is a praradox. They cannot understand, for instance, why a work that was accustomed to bring a score of pounds three or four years ago should sell with difficulty at half the price to-day, or why a book that was comparatively neglected at one time should spring into prominence almost at a bound and be sought for throughout the whole literary world. lit the solution is casy. The price of a book is not estimated solely by relerence to itself, but to the class to which it belongs also. It may stand out a prominem unit by reason of special circumstances or exeeptional intrinsic merit, but it will, nevertheless, rise or fall with the mass of which it forms a part.

A very good example of what is meant is afforded by the result of a rather miscellaneous sale beld by Messrs. Foster, on January ifth, when a complete sct of the laalminton Library, on large paper, 28 vols, 4 to, realised no more than f.50. These are essemtially sporting books, and it is on record that iour years aso the demand for works of this class was very much greater than it is now or ever has been in recent times. The Badminton set would then have brought about $£ y 0$; the live wolunces treating of Hunting, Fishing, and Shooting would themselves have realised $£ 50$. The scarce book is that on Hunting, by the Duke of Beaufort and Mr. Mowbray Morris. This would then have realised about $\mathrm{f} 33^{\circ}$; what it would bring now is a matter of speculation, for the Badminton l.ibrary is invariably sold as a whole as though to bide the wakness of its component parts.

Fit the Badminton Jibrary has not deteriorated with age nor become obsolete. It is an excellent scries that time has yet barely touched, to its bane, and during the period of the publication of its separate volumes scores of sporting books tollowed in its wake, all apparently forging ahead on a flowing tide, the tide of fashion, which soon slackened and erentually turned. It is easy now to lay down a rule for present guidance. Any sporting book of a practical turn seems doomed unless it can save itself by extreme age or contains coloured plates of a very special kind. Original editions of the novels of Surtes come within the latter category, and in addition they are not practical, a two-fold reason that places them and many other works of a similar character outside the rule.

Time will shew whether this conclusion is justified by the facts or no, for just at present we have very littice evidence to guide us. The month of January was, as usual, productive of very little that was interesting in the matter of books. On the zist and following day, Messrs. Branch & Lecte, of Liverpool, dispersed all that was left of the important library of the late Mr. H. F. Hornby, and in London Messrs. Hodgson © Co. had the field almost wholly to themselves. It is not, perhaps, very surprising that auctioneers of literary property prefer to keep the best books back till a more convenient season. Winter is the time to fead books already bought.

At Holgson's, however, some wery interestig works realised high prices. A coply of the origira edition of the whole five cantos of Pope's Rape if the Lock, 17 rt, brought $\mathcal{E} 50$, and Wordsworth's sin Laching llalk, 1793, and Descriptize Sketchis, 1793, brought fot and $£ 66$ respectively. A fiw yoars ago such amounts as these would have beon dubbed extortionate. They shew the spirit of the age, or rather of Dildin's fondness for "uncut" copies of rate and desirable books, which derive their importance primarily from considerations. of merit. The Rape of the Lock and Descrithtive Sketches were both "sewed," and all three copies were entirely "uncut." In that state they are, one and all, very rarely met with; indeed, it is a wery great question whether the work by Pope was not unique. Re-bound and cut-down copies are comparatively common; half-an-inch or less of paper makes a wonderful difference in these matters.

At Hodgson's, also, on January 8th a copy of Gray's Odes, ${ }^{1757}$, realized $£ 40$ for the very same reason. The wrapper may or may not have been original, probably it was not, but the piece was uncut, and so the price ruled high. The evolution of the collector, whether of books or of anything else worth accumulating, is a curious and interesting phase of his character. In the carly days a book was a book, a print a print, a postage stamp a postagre stamp, and so on through the whole gamut of acquisition. Not till later did be begin to draw distinctions between one specimen of the same thing and another. In times not so very far remote his agents "guillotined" books, cut prints close to fit frames, and stuch rare stamps into albums with strong gum, and he was satisfied, oblivious of the fact that such practices would one day be deemed worthy of Attilia and his murderous Huns.

In this our age the very reverse takes place. Books are examined with serupulous care to make sure that every leaf is intact, and also with the holke that a manuscript note in the handwriting of the author or in that of some former owner of repute may add to its interest and value. The life or a book is in many respects very like that of a man. A good pedigree is something to be proud of, impertec. tions and dirt answer to misdemeanors, mutilations to felonies, while a combination of such delinquentes is treason and a hanging matter. Never again stall we see the maddest, merriest days of John Bayf red and his crew, who :ipped out title-pages and mour d them in scrap-books.
The Liverpool sale, held by Messrs. Branch di. .e: ice, was productive of very good but not high prices. Ir. Hornby had selected his books with great taste and julf nent, but they were not of an ultra-fashionable kiar!. Moreover, he had berquathed the best of thet: to the Corporation of his native city. The Earl of Besshorough's set of Cobbett's State Tria/s, in thity-four volumes, $1800 \cdot 26$, realized $£ 19$ (Russia); Dat 1 Garrick's copy of A Mirrour for Magistrates, wre. with the great actor's initials on the title-page, Ais ros. (calf); Milton's History of Britain, 1670 , fromi Lir E. Sullivan's library, £ıo ros. (morocco) ; Rowesti's Poems, i8yo, and Ballads and Somnets, 185 . together two volumes, $£ 15$ (moroceo); and a fine set of Moliere's Cemeres, printed at Paris, in seven whlumes, 1674,8 vo, $£_{27}$ (morocco). This was revised and seen through the press by the author himself, ared inust have been one of his last literary labours, for he wats dead when the work appeared. In May, 1897 a tery fine copy of this edition realized no less than $E 6$ at Sotheby's.
Of late, Mr. J. C. Stevens has sold many works relating to natural history at prices which appear to be distinctly higher than those obtained elsewhere lor lrooks of the same kind. On January 28th he disposed of the library of Mr. G. R. Ryder, and "ntallished at least one record in the case of Curtis's well-known Bolanical Mayasine, the complete sut of one hundred and twenty-seren volumes realizing Ano. This included the Index to the first one hundred and seven volumes. All things conviderecl, this was a very high price, for the books were not uniformly bound, seventy volumes being ins halt calt and the remainder in cloth. But they were all "uncut," and that covers a multitude of sim. It is better to have a dirty and imperfect mon of any book than one that has been cropped by the binder. So runs the rule, and it is reasomable, bir a diety book may be eleaned, or "washed," as the "wnets say, and an imperfect one made perfect, but no power on earth can add a margin that has been rut away.
liur good sound works which will stand the wrack of time, and are not altogether subject to the whims and caprices of a mood that seems to change with the. Soon, commend us to acknowledged treatises on Salural History. Of late they have been rising rapelly in the market. Expensive to buy, none of then ever fall away without a very sufficient reason. But hell they ate not cweryone's books. We may, if tranish enough, pass judgement upon the merits of som: wody's "Ode" by hearsay, but scientific works dow furnish such a royal road to criticism as that. The: must be read with care and re-read, and that, (l-r) $\because$ is the reason why they are so stabile. Hans: have been sold lately: One set of twentythrec iolumes, Reichenbach's Liomes FFore Ger-manice, printed at Leipsig during $\mathbf{1 8 5 0 - 9 9}$, realized $£^{6} 63$ ros. at Sothety's on the last day of January. This is a distinet but by no means exceptional advance in price. We shall probably see it exceeded before the year is out.

The old English furniture of the late H. W. Cholmley, and another collection of furniture chiciby of the same period, formed by a privatio

 gentleman whose name was not disclosed, after having been on view during the beginning of the week were sold at Christie's on the $3^{\text {oth }}$ and 3 ist of January, when some remarkably high prices were realised, though by no means in excess of the value of the specimens sold.Quite apart from the artistic merit and intrinsic value of most of the fursiture offer. ed for sale, the whole collection aflorded, to those desiring to avail themselves of it, a most exceptional opportunity of studying under one roof the various styles of cabinct-making in vogue during the whote of the eighteenth century; and of studying them from pieked specimers of the hest and
most characteristie types of each period. The most interesting set from a technical point of view was undoubtedly the six mahogany chairs, with high and peculiarly narrow backs on cabriole legs carved with sholls, and hall and claw feet these chairs were exeeptionally fine examples of the transition style between Queen Anne purcand simpleand early (Chippendake, be. fore the introduction of the straight leg. The price realised was only 155 guincas, being considerably less than had been antiejpated, and granted that all six chairs were atsolutely pure, which there seemed no possible reason to doubt, the purchaser of the lot must be congratulated on having secured a distinct bargain, as the chairs in themselves were most remarkably decorative, as will be seen by the illustration ( $力$ ase 209). A set of four Queen Ame chairs, open backs, and rather plainly carved rail centres, but standing on the most 'lahorately carved cabriole legs, with eagles' heads and foliage somewhat in the contemporary French styte, and on ball and chaw feet, with brass claws, made the best price, fetching 150 guineas, or nearly $£ 40$ a chair ; their being in mahogany was in their favour, for they must have been made at a date when that wood had barely come into general use. Sheraton was wery well represented, both in the plain and decorated maneer, a set of nine very characteristic chairs, with shicled-shaped lacks, carved with " Prince of Wales" feathers, very slightly inlaid, with broad and comfortable looking seats, and in fine preservation, being admirable specimens of the former class (see illustrafion (there), and making $£ 88$ 4s., while the painted and inlaid satinwood pieces of the same period included a suite of a pair of settees, and four arm-chairs with cane seats; the backs carved with drapery and tassels, and painted with flowers and heads in medallion; and another par of settees very similar, ouly painted with nymphs instead of heads. The latter, however, fetched 150 guineas, or only 5 guincas less than the other pair and the four arm-chairs together.

The most unpleasing, in fact, the only unpleasing piece of furniture in the sale was a squat, clumsy looking and absolutely unpractical satiowoon sec retaire, with revolving cylinder front, and inlaill with shells and festoons in fancy wood; the legs of this piece were very thick and short, and the space for the knees was so shallow that no one save a child could possibly sit at the table to write; the whole cffect was that of a piece of furniture which had been cut down. This opinion, however, does not seem to have been shared by everyone, since the article in question made the goodly sum of $£ 105$, or more than double what was paid for a remarkably elegant satinwood writing-table, quite devoid of any carved or painted ornamentation. A very fine circular Chippendale table, with escalloped border, carved with gadroon and shell ornamentation on carved pillar and tripod, made £.ro 5s., a big price, but amply justified by the quality of the workmanship and the condition of the table.

All., or nearly all, the best prices made in lecember for porcelain and faience are ascribable to the Hôtel Droutot, the Lassalle collec-

and Pottery tion alone contributing an entire afternoon of old Dresden, most of which fetched good prices, the Char d'Apol. ton in a gilt bronze base making $£_{2}^{252}$ and a pair of statuettes representing quarters of the globe $£_{160}$, and several other lots making over 2,000 frs. A very remarkable statuette in biscuit china, after Falconnet, reached $\mathscr{E}^{212}$. At another sale at the same rooms a pair of Dresden statuettes of Tartars made $£ 204$; and $£ 68$ was given for a large rilbed jar in polychrome Delft; while a figurine of a young Lard fetched $£ 80$, four of the Seasons $£ 164$. and L'amour mídecin £ıro.

At Christie's, a pair of dark blue Chelsea vases, decorated with foliage and insects on a gilt gromed, sold for $£ 73$; and another pair, shaped like bottles. and decorated with butterflies in gold, $£^{6} 525$. A Worcester oviform vase and cover, painted with birds and flowers on a dark blue ground, made $£ 283$-the second highest price made for one individual piece of china either in London or in the Continent during last month; while $£ \begin{aligned} & \text { ro was paid }\end{aligned}$ at the same sale for a Worcester tea and coffee service fluted and paimed with bows and arrows in wreaths of flowers, consisting of thirty-four pieces, with crescent mark; a few days later a Worcester dessert service, painted with flowers, marle $£ 98$ its. in the same rooms; and a dinner service $£ .50185$. at Dowell's, in Edinburgh.

The best prices made by Serres were a the Hôtel lrouot, foro4 being paid for a er nret con ining six cups and saucers, tea-pot, cte., and dee ated by Boulanger-the highest price of the mul. h for china; and two groups in pate tendre ma $£ 34$.

A pair of polychrome fruit dishes of Rouen ware marle $£ 52$ ros. at the same rooms, and one large dist: with yellow ground $£ 68$ r6s. ; another poiychrome dish and stand reaching $£ 40$, and a pair "f ${ }^{u}$ ulychrome plates $£ 28$.
This very scarce and decorative ware seems to be hardly known over here, and certainly not properly appreciated. An English collector of china living in Brussels told me that he rarely came over to this country without picking up one or two bits of Rouen, or possibly Marseilles, or some other French china equally unsought after, for as many shillings as they were worth pounds across the Chamel, and several of his best bargains had been acquired at good sales in London with all the cognoscicuti present. A good example of another scarce ware, namely, a Savona scent burner, made $£ 8$ alsis in Paris, three groups of Nietlerweller hiscuit £132, and a polychrome plate of Marseilles $£ 14$. Some good prices were paid for famille verte at the Lassalle sale, a fish in Persian style reaching $£ 36$; a pair of vases mounted in bronze $£ 92$; another vase $£^{84} 16 \mathrm{~s}$.; while at a sale a few days earlier $£ 80$ ifs. was paid for a vase decorated with landscape and figures, and $£ 40$ for one decorated with family scenes. Nankin china also sold fairly well, as did one or two fine pieces of Japanese; but no prices were obtained worth recording.

The sale on the $29^{t h}$ of January, at Christie's, of the collection of Minton Poreclain formed by the late Colin Minton Campbell, of Woodseat, Uttoxcter, was in the fullest sense of the word an epoch-making one, so far as nincteenth century ceramics are concerned.
To use the phraseology of the Stock Exchange, a quatition for Minton China has now been established in the world of art, and products of this factory having, by what, to a slight extent, must be considered as a fortuitous happening, once obtained admission to the charmed circle of collected art ohjects of the first order, may fairly be trusted to maintain their new': acguired position, by reason of their most undeubted merit and the established reputations of swe 1 of the artists who have from time to time Inel connected with the Minton manufatory, to nam only two which are familiar to all art amateurs, Lou: Solon and Carier de Belleuse.
A. rough the Minton works have been established since the year 1793, still their reputation for producir art porcelain of the highest quality is pracically cocval with the reigh of our hate Quecn Vietoria, dating from the forties, so that Minton China, as one knows it, is most essentially a nineteenth century product, one might almost say Victorian. As might be expected from the personality of the collector, the ninety-four lots comprised some of the choiest specimens which this firm have produced during the nineteenth century, but even admitting the exceptional quality of most of the pieces sold, the prices paid must have exceeded the most sanguine expectations. Nor were these high ligures, in many cases, paid by millionaire amateurs, to whom price was a mere incident; but by keen and shrewd dealers in antigues and fine porectains, men who bought for a rise, well knowing the exact probabilities of what they were buying.

It is not likely, of course, that such a collection of Minton ware only, as that dispersed last month, will ever appear at auction again, but it is farly safe to prophesy that when from time to time specimens of similar merit are offerea, the basis of values recently established will be well maintained, and the change, if any, will be of an upward description.

The buyers who have just paid their long prices are not likely to allow their acquisitions to dutcriorate in value, and the reputation of the bigesest investors at the Minton Campleil sale is of itself sufficient to go far towards establishing an actual wogue for this most graceful and varied description of porcelain.

INDTAN TABARD IN CRIMSON VEITEET
A demand generally evokes a more or less adequate supply, as witness the present craze for coloured prints; but in the case of Minton China the supply will invariably be of undoubted authenticity, which, unfortunately, is more than can be said of the majority of colour-prints at present in the market.

The nincty four lots realised $£, 1,750$, or about fig a lot, the best prices being 155 gns . for a pair of oviform vases and covers, in the old Sères style, 21 ins. high, and decorated by Boullemin and Levoi, with camp and other scenes in medallion; a twohandled rase and cover, 22 ins. high, painted bySolon, 64 gns.; and a pair of 33 in . vases, painted with Cupids, by liiks, 60 gns. Many other fine examples made from 30 to 50 gns.
lis far away the most sensational objects of ant iok in January, in this country at any rate-although the actual prices realized were quite an un. Objets d'Art important item in the transaction-were the eyght Imperial Chinese Suals in fotle and soipsitone, of which it was the good forture of Messis. Debenham & Storr to bave the selling on the 3rst January. The seals in question had the homor to form the subject of some argument in the House of Commons, and had it not been for the loathing in which the punctiliously religious Chinaman holds all "foreign devils," these unique and interesting pieces of loot would have been formally retuoned to the Chinese Empress. As it is, the Empress declined to receive the seals back at any price, since they had become unusable through having been defiled by the touch of the hated forcigner. Each seal had its especial use, with, in most cases, an appropriate inscription, that on the scal used for the appointment of actors to the Imperial Palace being inscribed, "Nourish your mind and revive your spirits." The most interesting stal, from its being absolutcly unipue, was that which was made to denote the abrogation of the young Emperor's power by his mother, the sign of the deposition being a circle of dratons round the inscription, "Written by the Imperial hand in the Li Ching Court." This seal fetched $£ 85$. the others going for prices varying 1 rom $£ 37$ to E. 105.

The Indian curios, collected principally in the Nizam's domains by a rutired civil engineer, which included a singularly complete and representative collection of bidar ware, many pieces dating back to the eighteenth century, and some possibly even further. although they atracted a large number of visitors to Messrs. Puttick & Simpson's, and although mont of the specimens in the collection, whether ancient or modern, were first class examples of the work they represented, still failed to realize anything like their proper value, several very fine pieces of 'Tanjore work only fetching about a tithe of their original cost of production. The reasons which brought about these inadequate prices for really high-class workmanhin are wo : the utter inability of the average English:man or woman to appreciate Art as Art, and in their ennsequent hesitation in purchasing the most expui toly decorated article unkess they happen to toe the fant an: and the way in which the dondon shops are low ted with inferior articles of Oricntal workmanship, wate by prison labour in many cases, and made spe :ally for the English market.

Had these Indian curios been sold in Paris the result, to julge from the reports of the H. whi sale, which will be notied fully in the nest me iber of this itagazine, would have probably theen more atisf.c, ry to the owner.
One the most interesting lots sold was a specie at Her ' 'ds' tabard in crimson velvet, faded to a delicate old rose colour, and richly ornamented with gold a 1 gilt metal ; this garment, which was of the steeme ath century, was of Rajputana make of very fine guality; it has, I am glad to say, been purchased by the south kensington Museum. A fine pair of camel hide shiclds, beautifully enamclled in gold and colour, and of aceptional transparency, went for a very low price, ats to a keen appreciator of fine weapons they would have been worth three times the sum they fetched. The lidar ware, which is made of cast iron, inlaid with wery claborate designs in silver and sometimes gold, is of especial interest, as many of the desigus are purely Louis XVI., and were introcluced ly a Mons. Martin, a Frenchman, who was head of the french College in India early in the last century, the effets of whose artistic teachings and influence are still evident in the designs of many important buildings and much of the art work of that period in the districts which came under his notice.
Muel of the Bidar ware could not be more purcly French in style had it been made in laris itself. The comventionalisation of the poppy in some of the designs on the early pieces of the same work is resumsithle for several most graceful patterns.
"Ir never rains but it pours." $\Lambda$ few years ago the Rossi and Durazo sales afforded an excellent

Renaissance the cabinet of William Boyne, who had Eras idea of the opulence of numismatic and artistic illustration resident in the extremely numerous coinages of the l'eninsula and the two Sicilies, and in 1896 long resided in Italy, and had had consequent opportunities of acquiring a large assemblage of examples from nearly all the money-striking centres of that region, was dispersed in I.ondon concurrently with the Durazzo one at Conoa. These events tended to draw increased attention in this country to the attractive and picturesflue series of productions in which the genius of the c:rrly masters of engraving and die-sinking so widely and splendidly manifested itself. The ancient mone" of Italy and Sicily, in fact, forms a natural and u rthy sepuel, to a large extent, to that of the Gitech while it surpasses much of that of the Roma in sentiment and style. But the present Sar 1 brought with it a great surprise to all who were 1 t in the sucret. Signor Gnecehi, the eminent Italian numismatist, whose name in his own land is, at ail •ents, as honourably associated with philanthropic work as with archaology, decided to part with his noble collection, the labour of a life, in order to develop certain charitable schemes at home. The sale of the first portion took place in fanuary; the remainder will be offered in May next, and will embrace a very fine and complete sequence of the coins of Milan under its successive governments, those of the Visconti family being, of course, most distinguished by artistic merit and personal interest:

There were 1,884 lots in the January sale, and on the whok, regarding the circumstance that condition does not rule abroad so much as it has begun to do among ourselves, the specimens submitted to competition were considerably above the average. A personal inspection was sufficient to demonstrate, not only perhaps the comparative indifference to state, but the sacrifiee of it to comprehensive representation. A mere slance at the eleven sheets of plates will satisfy anyone that an overwhelming proportion of the prices fell below the highest standard, and those which we have had through our hands tell the same story. Newertheless, the catalogue, most carefully prepared by MM. Hamburger of liankfort, where the sale was hekd, is a monumental record of culture and indefatigatbe: perseverance on the part of the late owner, and the prices realised were alogether high. His Majesty the King of Italy, who is an enthusiastic amatcur in this direction, and who commenced his career as a buyer while he was Prince of Naples, secured nearly all the best or rarest items through an agent for his own calinet. Lot 1275 , a gold zecthino of 1 borso D'Este, first Duke of Fierrara, was snatehed from the writer of this Note, who had sent a commission for it, by the Covernor of Ferrara. But Count Nicolo Papadopoli, the accomplished author of the Woncte di Venesia, was present, and purchased on his own account. We understand that, although the catalogue was partly in Italian and partly in German, and the prices were set down in marks, the business was conducted at the table in Italian.

The catalogue will rank as a permanent work of reference; the descriptions are most elatorate and correct. The :mere reading of it brings back to one's mind the statc of affairs in Italy during the Renaissance period in a most graphic manner ; names occur such as those of Ludovico Sforza, the redoultable Giangalleazoo, various members of the Visconti family, and countless other makers of contemporary history, not the least important of whom were of papal rank; indeed, the list of coins struck at Avignon during the fourteenth century, and again during the schism, is one of the largest and most instructive in the whole catalogue. It is almost impossithe to realize, until one has perused this catalogue, the number of autonomous cities and states, petty republics, and small principalities which constituted the Italy of the middle and late middle ages.

As soon as the concluding part of the Gnecchi sale has taken place, the king proposes to send to press his national work on the Coins of Italy, which has long occupied the attention of His Majesty and certain coadjutors, and may be expected to prove unusually satisfactory and exhaustive.

Prior, however, to the completion of this most notable affair, another large property came into the market this February, and was sold at Milan. It had no pretensions to the same unique rank as the Gnecchi cabinet, but naturally, so far as it went, followed the same lines. Nor was it restricted, as in the former case, to medieval or modern Italian money. It may have, at the same time, the common effect of bringing this charming series more into general notice, as not a few of the lots were bought for the English market. A very curious and rare, if not unique, item, was a proof in gold of the marchetto of the Venetian I) oge, Giovanni Cornaro I. ( $1625-30$ ).

But the prevalent character of the collection was immeasurably inferior to the Gnecchi one in point of state, and the plates accompanying the catalogue were worse than useless, owing to their imperfect reproduction of the examples.

Al.thotgh some very good silver changed hands during January, and in nearly every case at full price, there were comparatively few fancy prices
Plate realised, for the simple reason that the number of pre-Georgian specimens which appeared at auctions during the month could almost be reckoned on the fingers of one hand, certainly on those of two.

The majority of early pieces which appeared consisted of porringers, a Queen Ame one, dated 1706, fetching $\mathcal{L}_{5}$ per oz, at Christie's, and one of William III., $£ 56 \mathrm{~s}$.; while a James II. miniature porringer made 13 gns. all at.

Nessrs. Debenham & Storr sold a fine early Georgian pierced sweetmeat basket for 2 gns. per ou, and a silver cup of the same period for $£ 6$ s.

We hear an interesting story about a small piece of Charles II. silver of exceptional quality and preservation, which, after having been bought at an auction sale not forty miles from London for 18 s . per oz., changed hands in rapid succession for $£ 5, £ 12, £ 20$, and linally the record-breaking price of $£, 25$ per oz., each time, of course, by private treaty. The piece in question weighed somewhat under 4 oz., its first price being about as many shillings as the last was pounds.

Messrs. Debenham made about $£ 11$ for a pair of old Sheffield wine coolers, and several other specimens of Sheffictd made fair prices at Christic's and elsewhere.

Both Messrs. Debenham \& Storr and Messs. Glendining held Medal Sales during January, and though no sensational record-lraking prices were made, still the medals at both rooms attained full value, and showed, as we have said before, that this comparatively new form of collecting is steadily gaining ground and increasing in public favour. It is a great pi:y that medals which have been struck and issued during the last forty years should be so vastly inferior both in conception, design, and execution, to those of the Peninsular war, the old John Company, and uen the Crimea; but that such is the case no one on comparing the products of the two periods can possibly deny. The best prices made at Messrs. Debenham's rooms were (omitting all mention of the inevitable Volunteer medals, whose name is legion and whose value ranges from $£$ ro to $£ 30$, usually averaging about $£(5):-a$ Naval (iencral Scrvice Medal with two bars, "Amazon," March ${ }^{1} 3^{\text {th }}, 1806$ ( 30 issued), and Boat Service, January 6 th, 1813 ( 21 issued), $£ 38$. The events for which both these bars were given, were in each case a plucky victory gained against overwhelming odds. Another medal, also for Naval General Sicrice, which fetched a high price, had one bar, l'omper. June 17 th, 1809 ( 21 issued), and was given for the capture of the Hautpoult off Guadaloupe. Messrs. Glendining sold the " Kelat-i-(ihizie" Medal, $18: 2$, awarded to a Havildar Regiment of Kelati- (Ghikic. for $£^{27}$, with officer's guarantee. A Naval (ieneral Service Medal, with three bars, November 4 th, 1805 ; Basque Roads, 1809 ; Boat Service, September 27 th, 1810, awarded to Benjamin Reed, £26 ros., and a group of two, the Peninsular medal with fise hars. Rolica, Vimiera, Corunna, Vittoria, P'yrenees, and the gold order of a Knight of Hanover, both given to a Licutenant of the 6th Foot, $£ 28$.The Regimental and Volunteer Medals, as usual, made full average prices.

MR. MICHAEI, TOMKINSON'S JAPANESE COIIIECTION AI FRANCHE HALI, WORCESTERSHIRE PART I.-MORK IN IACOUER HY R. E. I).

It is a moot point whether Japanese art will survive contact with European commercialism; and there is too much reason to fear that the new: conditions brought about by the opening of Japan to Fiuropean commeree must have an injurious effect on the handicraft of one of the two artistic nations left in the world. The first essential to suceessful competition in the markets of the world is cheapmess of production, and cheapness is incompatible with soonl work. The Japanese hitherto, like the medieval Europeans, have aimed at beauty in everything that they made, because to them, as to our own forefathers, it ame naturally to make beautiful rather than ugly things. like keats, they have identified use and beauty, and have never, like modern Europeans, made the useful and the ornamental two separate and mutually exclusive categories. The fapanese craftsman, like the medieval European craltsman, lavished as much care and time and taste on an ordinary houschold utensil as does the modern painter-to whom the term "artist" is in England exlusively applied-on the framed picture which alone is generably recognised as a " work of art." That is why we, to whom beauty is a luxury, treasure in museums and glass cases the ordinary objects of daily life made by the Japanese and by the Europeans of past as. Hut the leisurely production which is essentiak if $t$ thing produced is to have any artistic value is not prosibite under modern commercial conditions. If, seems to be the casc, Japan aspires to a share in : © commeree of the world, leisurely production mu go, and with it will go the artistic sense of the fal nese nation. Nefther a man nor a nation can ser: art and mammon at the same time. Already lap: 1 is producing for the markets of a "higher civil ation" cheap commodities, which, although they show a workmanship and a mastery of technique surpassing those of the European workman, are nevertheless pioduced mercly to sill, and are rightly regarded with contempt by the Japanese themselves. It is hard to see how Japan can escape the fate of the other nations of the world, or ward off the ultimate triumph of the (heap and Nasty. which is the inevitable outcome of competitive commercialism, by any other means than that of once more shutting out European commerce and Westerm civilisation.

(c). pase 226)

Whether or not this is too pessimistic: a view, we may in any case be grateful to those who have collected together examples of the work of one of the two remaining countries where the essential conditions of artistic production have survived until now. For there will in the future be fewer and fewer opportunities of collecting tine fapanese work; indeed, it is alrady almost impossible. After the revolution, when the feudal system ceased, the Japanese nobles and Semurai became comparatively poor, and were compelled to part with many of the fine examp'es of were leaving the country. The wealthy Japnese connoisscur is always ready to buy any artistic object that there may be for sale. Japan is practically closed to the European collector. What is imported to Europe is inferior work, which is considered good enough for the European nations, for whose taste the Japanese has a profound contempt.

It would be impossible for any collector starting now to get together such a collection of Japancse art as that which Mr. Tomkinson has amassed. It is about a

lacquer and metal work used in the houscholds of the noble families. And, as they were forbidden to wear swords, they parted also with the beautiful fistha (or swordguards), which had been handed down from one generation to another. Now things have changed; Japan has hecome a prosperous and wealthy country, and the Japanese are not to be tempted, as they formerly were, to part with their treasures. Nor, perhaps, are they quite so certain that their treasures can be replaced, and they have become alarmed at the rate at which they quarter of a contury since he first leard "the least a-calling," and, when he had once realised what the art of Japan was, he soon lecame an enthusiast. Ever since he has gone on steadily acquiring specimens of every kincl and of every period, and the result is the wonderful collection-the finest and most representative collection in Europe, if not, indeed, in the world-which is now to be seen at Franche Hall. 'There are, of course, other good collections. Sir Trevor Lawrence, for instance, has a fine collection of lacquer, and Mr. R. Seymour 'Trower's collection is a very good one. But there is none so representative of every class of object as Mr. 'Tomkinson's. Mr. 'omkinson has only once visited lapan, but he had for years a collector there, commis. sioned to buy him any fime object that might le procurable.

Mr. 'Tomkinson's tistes and interests as a collector by no means end with the art of Japan. His collection of manuscripts. old printed books, and bookbindings is, by itself, worthy of an article, including, as it does, many a beatuful manuseript and illuminated look of Hours, min a splendid specimen of printing, from a Caxton 1 the Kclmscott Chucer, and many a binding by cue of the masters of the art, to say nothing of hose valuable but somewhat over-rated books, the four Shakespeare folios. But we must on this or sion pass by the library and make for the Jal nese

Less than two mikes out of Kidderminster stands Franche Hall, a rambling, unpretentious house, stringely deceptive when seen from the outside and not in the least suggesting its spacious interior ; as free indeed as is its owner from anything like ostentation. Firom the billiard-room opens the gallery which Mr. Tomkinson has built to house his specimens of Japanese art; our illustration on page 221 shows how the pieces, some six thousand in number, are arranged. Kerond the walls are cases containing pottery, porcelain, enamel, metal work, carved ivorics, wooden objects, and swords; in one case, for instance, the whole history of Satsuma is illustrated by piceses of that beautiful faitone dating from its earliest manufacture to the present day. The cases standing out in the gallery contain, for the most part, boves in that wonderful lacquer which is the glory of Japanese art. And in more cases at the upper end of the gallery are drawers upon drawers full of dxpuisite inra, netsuke, and twothe. liswides these there are hundreds of kekemono (hanging pictures) and colour-prints, and a large çuantity of embroideris. To deal with such a collection within the compass of such a paper as this is well-nigh a hopeless task. All that can be done is brietly to touch on some of the main points in connection with it.

In the first place, it may be well to point out that Mr. Tomkinson has not confined himself to old pieces or eschewed modern work if it is good. Nor is there any reason why a collector of Japanese art should do so. That which is old is not necessiarily finer than that which is new in a country where the artistic sense has generally survived. Some collectors, no doubt, will tell you that the making of really fine inro ceased with the eighteenth century, But ihis, as Mr. E. (illertson has pointed out, is a very grat mistake. The style of decoration has changel, it is true, but some of the makers of inro in the rineteenth century can be compared with the gretest of their predecessors. The individuality of the sork of the old lacquerers camot, of course, be reprod ed, any more than a modern painter can re?roduc: the work of botticelli; but the idea that the of in Japanese art is necessarily better is, in fil . a Euronean idea applied to conditions very diff ent from those now existing in Rurope. no kenger make the beautiful things that were made in the past．The passion for the art of the past is in itself a confession of the inaderpuacy of the art of the present，a confession that we are forced to make． As regards European work，it is almost always the cast that the old is better，because European art which developed through the early Niddle Ages until it reached its zenith in the fourtecnth century， Irim that time gradually deelined until it reached the level of the Great Exhibition of $\mathrm{I}_{5} 1$ ．In Japan the theline is only now beginning（as a result of contact with Europe），and a true connoisscur of lapanese art will not draw a line where none in fact exists．

Mr．Tomkinson，therefore，puts side by side with his fine specimens of the best work of past centurics somes specimens also of the lwest work of recent times． He has been guided by the aim which alone inspires the true conneisseur，the aim of acquiring that which is in itself beautiful．Mere rarity，as he himself sal ．has in no case been a passport to his collection． Th．pride of possessing that which is merely rare on：because it is rare is，after all，as vulgar a semti－ mi tas the pride of possessing that which is merely （a）nsive．Both sentiments are to be found among ral etors of sorts，but such collectors are not thase wis the best taste or the greatest artistic disecrn－ He 1.

In dealing with a Japanese collection one naturally begins with the work in lacequer，that supreme triumph of Japanese art in which the Japanese have no rivals． Fine hacguer work is an art confined tothe lapoucse： the work in lacepuer of India，China，and P＇ersia is wery poor in comparison．The origin of lacepur was purely utilitarian ；it is the sap of a spectes of sumach， called by botanists the Rhus zermififera，and articles of wood were coated with it in order to make them impervious to liquid．Gradually the lacquer came to be decorated in various ways，and the originally plain lacquered objects developed into the marsellous inlass of coloured lacquer and gold，and incrustations of gold and other metaks，ivory，and mother－of－pearl． M．Gense hardly went too bar when he saill that ＂Japanese lacquered objects are the most perfect works that have issued from mer＇s hands＂：in design and in workmanship alike they can harelly be equalled． No workmen have shown more complete matery of their materials man have the Japanese lacquetors： the wealth of invention and originality shown in their designs is marvellous；the ingernity and shill with which the designs are carricl out are almost miraculous．

whose names are known from the sixteenth century onwards. The art of lacquer is, of course, much wher than the sixteenth century. The carliest extant opeciments date from the sixth to the eighth eentury, and include the scabbard of the sword of the Emperor Simu, the carliest existing specimen of gold lacquer work. But the names of the carliest artists are bost in the mists of the past. The art of liecpuer reached its height in the righternth century, which produced the most celcbrated work (r. in the craft, though in the mincteonth century also there were liequucrers quits equal with their great predecessors. Indeed. in the opinion of no less an authority than Mr. E. (illbertson, shibata \% chin, who wats born in 1807 and died in 1891, was one of the greatest masters of the art that ever lived. Mr.Tomkinson has many fince cxamples of his work.
lacquer is used for all sorts of objects of daty use. Among the finest specimens of the art are the susuritheteo or cases of writing materials, and the inro, or portable medicine-hoxes, formerly carried by all Japanse of the noble and .immerai (or gentle) dasses. Other lacquered objects are cabinets and implements for Japancese sames, and cabinets called teloko-kon, for holding tobacen, pipes and other smoking materials.

The Bustration on page 220 shows a susurituak" (writing-hox) of the seventeenth century, signed by seisei Kürin. The iris, which forms the decoration of the lid, is in gold facquer, shell and lead in relief on a red ground; inside the lid are a court roble and lady on a black ground. (iold lacquer in relief is known as fako-makive; the material uncll is powdered gold or gold foil either of the pure metal or of a greenish allog. Unfortunately a ciproduction in half-tone cat give no satisfactory idea of the exquisite delicacy of the work or the "ffeet of the colsuring. but the bealaty of the design is apparent in the illustration. Köith was the great "impressionist" artint of Japan in the seventerntheor. tury. A virsatike genius, he excelled notomly in lacquer hum also in painting: and pottery. $\mathrm{H}_{\mathrm{c}}$ was a master who foundecl a schoos that prow duced manyerebrated disciples even to the middle of the last eentury. Alany derobecs of his work arc to be found among Frunch comnoisseurs, in whom his pectuliar genius tinds perhaps more enthusiastic ad. mirers than among our linglish collectors.
Thue illustration on page 222 gives an carmple of taka-makive combined with hira-mative or fiat wold bacequer. It is a kodansu (or small cabinct) of the eighteenth century, with three drawers, one of w'ich contains thirteen boxes for incense. Another soventernth century piece is the very fine froshitunke (hox for manuscripts). shown on page 224. The larer picture shown, which is in gold bacyuer of wrous shades both in high and low relief. is on the lied of the box. It represents the long bridge at seta, on the shores of Lake Biwa ; the caste of Zése and the pine-tree of Karasaki are introduced in the midde distance, with Mü-dera on the hills lexhend. The sround of the picture is of kirikan: an inlay of small squares of wold foil, and it is surrounded be a theating of pewter. The wher is of lacquer to imitate gotl inlay on irom. The interesting koitansm, will a cage-like upher part (see pore 23.3 ), is also of gold lacquer, the perforated panels being of silver. It is arly cighteenth century work, and is probably by Kijijkawa Kujiro, the first of the Kajikawa family, several members of which were great artists in lacquer. A specimen of the work of the great Koma sthool is a susurituak, of the early eighteenth century. The Koma family were cour lacquerars from about 1650 down lacequer, Mr. Tomkinson has in his collection more than a thousand imo, the great majority of which are in lactuer, thoush many are of silver, bronze, iwory, porectain, wood, or ohter matcrial. The use of invo is supposed to have been introduced into dapen in the sixteenth century, and it is generally considered that it was about the time of koyetsu at the end of that century that they became important as works of art. Tsuchida Sogetsu, the pupil of Koyetsu, was the lirst great inro maker. The inro consists of a nest of small boxes (used gencrally to carry medicines, hut occasion. ally by lacies for cos. meties) strung ingether ley a silken cord, by which the inro is attached to the girdle ; it is $k$ eph from slipping through the girdle by a sort of bution known as the netsukt? Netsuké are usually madc of ivory or wood, and are exquisitely carsed; fre quently they take the form of a tiny figure or group of two or thric figures. There is no space to illustrate any of the wetsuke in Mr. Tomkinson's collection ; the: are omitted in preference to other objects, because they are about the best known of Japancsc works of art, being appreciated wen by those who do not get realize the heauty of laçuer.

From such a wealth of fine pieces i: is difficult to make a selection. but to 1847 , and produced work of the fuest quality. The expuisite picture on the outside of the lid (see pare $219)$ is in green, gold and silver lacyuer on a black around dusted with gold, the meon and its reflection being in silver. The inside of the lid is shown on this page ; it in decorated in goke and green lacguer on a ground of kim $j i$ and mash-ii, the bridge and mountains in the distance being in inlaid gold. Kingiz is a gold ground produced by dusting powdered potd ower the surface of the lacepuer whice wet; and mashijiz is a lacquer in which gold-foil in coarse powder is more or kess thickly seattered.

the examples of inro illustrated are perhaps as representative as any small number could be. In the first plate (see page 225) there is once inro in carrecl wood and another in cloisonné enamel : tooth of these date from the cighteenth century. Fias of the eight lacequer pieces betong to the sam. century, and the remaining three are examples of ninewenth century work. The wooden inwo is the entre one of the three at the top of the plate $(\mathbb{N},+t):$ it is decorated with a conventional dragon, a 1 the inside is in wrolve work, in which the grond is crumpled gold keaf, which is covered with : quer coloured by dragon's blood. is rubled down that. so that the gold is exposed in the higher portions of the aromed, and the lower hawe a depper hue. The Kajikawa used this process a sreat deal in the lining of imro. The inro in claisionm' is in the middle on the right hand side of the plate (No. g). The infor decorated with a stork (and on the other side with a tortoise), which appears in the middle row, second from the bottom of the plate (No. 6), is the work of Yamada Toyoyoshi. It is in gold, silver, and colour on a ground of tagi-dushi -lacquer with a perfectly smonth polished surface, in which the designs are lirst covered up and then the outer coating is carsfully rubled away. A charming little imro is that at the bottom of the plate in the midele (No. 7), which is decorated with fern-leaves and firewood in gold on a black ground ; it is by Saikindo. In the top right-hand conner is an imo decorated with dragon-fies in tori-dashi by shunsho (No. 8). The ifro in the top herthand corner (No. 1) is one of the nineteenth century preces, and is the work of Kazutoyo; it is a beautiful piece of work, and so are the two other nincteenth century examples shown in the bottom comers (Nos.

3 and 10 ), which are both of mosaic. The burses on No. 10 are wonderfully spirited.

The six lacquer pieces in the second inro plate (see paric 227) are all the work of Koma Yasutada, who lised at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the ninetcenth centuries, and whose work in lacquer, in Mr. Tomkinson's opinion. is unsurpassed. The inro decorated with a pracock and flowers, which appars at the top of the group ( $\mathbf{N o}$. I), is in tugri-dushi, i.e., flat lacquer rubleed and polished, and that immediately underneath (No. 4) is on srobu ground. The three others decorated with hirds (Nos. 2, 3, and 6) are from a set if nine made by Koma Yasutada for the Shögun Tokugawa, by whom they were presented to Tocla, Daimio of Mino. These are very fine specimens of the master's work. That decorated with a pheasant in togi-dashi (No. 6) is wonderfully finished, and the bird on a plum branch, also in togi-dashi, is equally fine (No. 2).

This necessarily brief sketch can convey but litte idea of the wealth of lacquer work in Mr. Tomkinoms collection. The other objects must be lefi for a second article.

THE THOMY THIERY BEQUEST TO THE LOUVRE BY MAX ROLIIT

Uxtrs, about 1820 French landseape painters remained strictly under the influence of what are known as "classical" principles; following rlose in the footsteps of Poussin and Claude Lorrain, they made no effort to free themselves from the chains that bound them down to conventional compositions, treated in a strictly academic styls. That is to say, they went for their inspiration not to Nature herself, byut to the works of their preHecessons and the irecepts of their tuachers: they had tarnt to combine on the ir canvases trees, mountains, rivers, and ruins in certain fixed and acecpted orders from which they very seldom darsel to depart. It has often been remarked that a generation, born and bred in the midst of political and social disturbances, almost inamiably produces pirits whose every cflort tends towards ariginality of thought and :splires to freedom from the fetters of emventionality. Thu in France, after the cat Revolution that losed the cighteen it century, after the inessant wars of the irst Empire, there arose a whole bevy of men, who, with entirely new ideals before them, completely transformed the literature and art of their country.

Michelet, Victor Hugo, I amartine, led the literary revolution, while the names of Delacrois, Decamps, Jules Wupré, Diaz, Corot, Rousseau and Millet are for ever inseparatle from the movement by which landscape painting was raised in France to a pinnacle where the greatest Flemings of the seventeenth century had till then stood abone and unapproachable. To this phalanx of heroic fighters, the most salient of whom I have named, other painters, such as Dauligny and Troyon, joined themselves a bittie later, and thus formed the immortal group of geniuses known in France as the School of 1830 , and often called the Barbizon School, from the name of the little village near Fontainchleau where several, though not esery one of these artists lived and painted.

For the works of these masters, the late Monsicur Thomy Thiery had a passionate love, and during some thirty years almost his sole interest, his sole enjoyment in life, lay in the assembling of the marvellous cot bection which he hats bequeathed to the French mation and for the permanent display of which a room will shortly be rescrved in the Louvre. This gift, whose peruntary value is estimated at not far from $£ 400,000$, is one for which, thanks to the exellent juthoment displiayed by the late collector, not only his countrymon, but students and lovers of art all the world ower, owe Monsicur Thiery an undying debt of gratitude.

At the present time, when at a distance of relatively only a few years, the works of these artists fetch fabulous sums, it is almost incredible that, for the greater part of their lives, most of the men who probluced such masterpicees lived in poverty and son': of them in actual want. Jean François Millet, whe eworld-famous Alugetus was bought a few gears ast for about $£ 34,000$ by Monsicur Chauchard, stre: gled throughout his life in order to provide, for his ife and family, the very necessaries of existence.
$\therefore$ child of the soil himself this parents were pert tats of Normandy), Millet painted the children of $t$ e soil, At first, it is true, he treated classical subjects, but these he soon abandoned, and devoted the whole of his carcer to depicting the joys and the tragedy of peasant life. He felt keenly the close relation that exists between the toiler in the fields and the carth from which, by the sweat of his brow, be wrests a painful livelihood, the indestructible bond which unites them and makes the man truly part and pareel of the soil; in this sense, some affinity may be said to exist between Millet and another great genius of the nineteenth century, Emile Zola; but whereas the writer emphasized the sordid side of peasant life, the coarse nature which must necessarily belong to those whose entire existence is oceupicd with violent manual labour, the painter, with the true sense of the poet, ennobled and glorified work, and expressed, in the simple gestures and attitudes of his peasants, their deep, uarootable suffering, and their resignation to their lot. A poet he was in the highest sense of the word; in his hands the commonest farmyard secole attained the dignity and grandeur of tragedy; his sowers, his ploughmen are not merely habourers, they are eternal types of toiling and suffering humanity. It is related that on one occasion Decamps and Millet both painted a shepherd standing by a stream, and that the former, on secing his rival's work, could not refrain from exclaiming: "We have treated the same subject, but my picture shows a peasamt near a brook: Millet's is a Man on the banks of a great rivet?"

Of these, the name that will soar highest and ever bigher in the estimation of posterity is beyond a doubt that of Corot, the bard of carly morning; Corot, from whose brush masterpicees flowed as casily and with as little effort as song from the throat of the skylark; Corot, the deseendant of Thiéry collection. The charm of Ses Rotteems, Le fendeur de Buis, La Iricaution Matirnelle, le Fetit Vannewr, lies in the marvellous amplification of the simple subjects. What could be more simple, more homely, I was almost saying more vulgar, than the subject of La Lessivense, which we reproduce on page 235 , yet who can deny the dignity of the woman's movement, the poctic and almost chassic beauty of her attitude, as she empties the contents of a jug into the large vat in which slae is preparing to do the washing? And in the single: figure of lat fritueuse d'Herles watching a smouldering pilc of rubbish (see page 229), does not Millet express the endess misery of a life of work and want?

Yirgil, Theocritus and Anacreon; Corot, who, :n a master of "values," may to ranked with Rembrandt himself, although they worked in so widdy differem a scale; just as Rembrandt, with his infinite combinations of browns and blacks, suceeded in rendering ewery conceivable degree of light and shade, so. with his soft greens and ineffable greys, Corot can giw the impression of every tone in nature. Two of Cumat fincst works are already in the Louvere, and in wio more are contained in the Thiéry bequest, am age others such famous canvases as La Route d.I Tas. from the Fine collection; Le Soir, from the lell odre collection; and Les Ressers de Sarremte, a repl a ol which, recently sold for 45,000 francs, wass illusi itd in Tine Convolsseter for February.

In this brotherhood of artists, among whom envy and professional jealousy were unknown, who fought steadily for their ideal, undisturbed by repeated failures and rebuffs, who never consented to sacrifice their artistic independence to financial considerations, Corot was ever the most fortunate; his father was a suressful tradesman, who, though he considered paitaing an idler's profession, left his son sufficient money to keep him from want throughout life. Corot mad use of his relative wealth to help, his poorer come ules, and many a time be extended to them a savio - hand in their difficulties. It was Jules I lupres whe me day speaking of Corot, said: "As a painter it w: be difficult to replace him, but as a man, it will $\mathrm{l}_{\mathrm{x}}$ a lite impossible."

I' pré and Corot were dose frichds, and many a cons; fracy did they hatch to help their common frote : Rousseau, without hurting his over-sensitive feelings. With all their mutual admiration, with the same profound love of nature to inspire the $m$, nothing could be more widely different than the methods and the palette of Corot and Jules Bupre. The latter's nervous vigour, his rich tones and heavy impastos, are in strange contrast with the former's smooth, silvery, and vaporous landscapes, so ethereal that 1)upre himself said that Corot must hate had wings to paint like that. The twelve works which represemt Jules Dupre in the collection under review are magnificent and characteristic examples; the most tamous is Lic $^{\text {Gramd Chine, which, during the }}$ troubled days of 1848 , was sold by auction for Goo tranes, and would today feteh some $£ 12,000$. Les L.todes, from the Iaurent Richard collection; I'Etang, from the Boyard sale ( $188_{4}$ ) : and the Soletif comthent "fres TOruse, which belonged formerly to Monsicur Coquelin, are all works of the very first order.

A truly conchanting work is Les Bords de a Lotre, by Theodore Rousseau (see poge 232); the river has overllowed its banks, and the country is cotered by great pools of water, above which mounds of sand appear here and there In the distance the trees and cottages of the opposite bank are seen through a damp hase, and the entire picture, both in tratment and composition, reminds us forcibly of the finest works of Van Goyen. And at the sight of such masterpieces as this and Lees Chemes and soleth couchent, for which M. Thony Thiery refused £. 4,000 , and so many more in his collection, we remember that again and again, year after year,

Hi c. TkOyon
Rousscau's work was refused at the Salon! Few, indeed, during his life-time were those who recognised his genius; his paintings sold for very small prices, and in 1863 , only four gears before his death, when absolute necessity constrained him to hold a sale of his pictures, he was overjoyed to find seventecn works l, ring in 14,866 francs, or not quite $£ 600$. These seventeen pictures would no doubt now feteh thirty or forty times this sum, which, however, served to relieve the artist's pressing embarrassment, and even enabled him to acquire some lapanese prints, newly imported at that period, and for which he hat an intense admiration.

Narcisse Diaz was another favourite of M. Tiomy Thiéry, and when we let our eyes wander over the doan gems picked by him out of the most famous collections dispersed in his time, the names of Correggio and Tiepolo, Watteau and Cl. Worrain involuntarily occur to us; some of the qualitits of all these masters I iad undoubtedly possessed, yet he imitated none of them and was always thoroughly original; his marvellous palette, which makes him one of the greatest colourists of all time, is absolutely his own. Nature was his only teacher: in the woods of Sevres and Fontainebleau he learnt those fairy-like effects of sunshine playing amongst the foliage in the rendering of which he stands alone and unrivalled.

A rapid worker, his impulsivencess was only equalled by his versatility. From under his magic brush there sprang with equal facility a deep forest glade with the sun struggling to pieree the dense canopy overhead, or a portrait of a blonds and graceful girl, or a seene of pure romance such as the Verus and Adonis in this collection (see fuge 233) ; but in all we find that gorgeous colour and davaling sunlight that make cren a slight sketeh of Liat resemble an open casket of jewels.

The names of Daubigny and Troyon complete the list of the great masters of landscape of the school of $183^{\circ}$; Troyon, who as a cattle painter cambe nearer to P'aul Potter than any other artist, and Dauhigns, whose many points of affinity with our own Constable should render him paricularly interesting in this country. Of both these masters M. Thiery possessed magnilicent examples: Les Houtewrs de Sirresnes, by Troyon, was one of the successes of the Salen of 1859 ; it belonged at one time to M. Gambart, of Iondon, and at his sale in 1868 it was knockeri down tor $£+00$. An offer of $£ 20,000$ failed some yars ago to wrench this chef d'wutre from M. Thiery's gallery. Nor did he ever consent to part with the same master's Le passage du Guf, LAAbrenzoir (illustrated on this page), and sesen more which now belong to the French nation.

No less than thirteen pictures illustrate Dauligns. severat of theme examples of those river seemes and sunset effects for which the is especially famous. Lat Mare aux Herons, La Tamise à Erith. La lanne de letang a'Oprovos, are masterly pages selerted to show Daubigny's love of cluar atmospluere and transparent water, and his complete frectom from any form of mannerism.

doubt wonder what influence it was that set these grata spirits tree from the bonds of ta peinture imuracese, as it has been called, of Louis David, Baron Gros, Baron Gerard, and other academic panters of the first Empite. The reply th this query will he found on the same walls, in the works of Eusene Delacroix, the founder of the romantic school. He it was who tore asunder the fetters of classic conventionality; he would have none of the cold beauty of form which was the supreme :deal of I David and his followers, none of that artificial Roman aspect which the vanity of Napolcon had succeeded in stamping upon every form of art. Welacroix sought his inspiration in life, its movement and its colour. No scene was too dramatic, too stecped in horror and blood for his fearless gemius; his ambition. as often expressed ly himself, was that the sight of his pictures should cotimunicate to the beholder the same thrill which he himself had experienced while painting. Scoffed at and ridiculed at first by the critics, he very soon, the the sheer stress and violence of his talent, forced himself upon the recognition of his contemporarics, and to-day he holds a special position in the history of French art as a mastur colourist and creator of throbling life. M. Thomy Thiéry possessed eleven of his works, among others a replica of the Midte Furionse of the Lille Museum, a Christ on the Cross (ssci fare 231), and several pictures of wild beasts.

In this rapid survey of $\mathbf{M}$. Thomy Thiery's princely bequest to his adopted country the came originally: from Mauritius) I can do no more than record the presence of setenteen works by lecamps, a painter whom the opening of the Wallace Collect on has done much to make known in Englant, five exquisitely finished Meissoniers, and six soches of the Viddle Ages by Isabey, besides a painting and one hundred and thirty bronzes by barye. laberys picture of a marriage at Delft is reproduced on page 230 , and on this page is one of the Meissomicrs.

I have tried in this short study not so much to describe the individual pictures contained in this collection as to give a general idea of its composition and of the spirit which presided at its formation; I have attempted, so far as is possible in so limited a space, to point out the distinct personalities of the artists represented, without losing sight of the bond that holds them together, the infinite love of truth and nature which seems to govern every stroke of their pencil, every swecp of their brush. I cannot conclude without giving expression once more to the regret, nay, to the sense of shame which must he fite by all who are familiar with the works of these im. mortal masters, that our National Gallery does not yet possess a single canvas by any one of these incomparable artists, and that the French school of the nineteenth century should be solely represented there by a common-place picture of so second-rate a painter as Rosa Bonheur.

The Wallace Collection has, it is true, now pardy filled this gap in the artistic possessions of the nation: but even there one deplores the absence of Millet and Daubigny, whilst the canvases signed Corot, Troyon, Diaz and Jules Dupré do but scant justice to those masters.

GREEK VASES
BY A. H. SMITII
a singular Greek inscription from Epilaurus enumerates the marvellous cure: wrought by the god Asculapius of that place. Amougst sther matters of a more medical charac ter, it relates how a boy who was carrying his master's baggage towards the shrine had a fall. He ofened his wallet, and found his master's filvourice drinking cup broken in pieces. While he was rucfully trying to fit the broken pieces together, a passing traveller asked him why he was thus fruilessly employed. "Not even Wsculapius of E:pidaurus could make a broken cup sound." The boy put the pieces back in his wallet and went on to the shrine. 'On arrival he once more opened the wallet and found the cup complete. The mastur, to whom the matter was reported, forthwith dediated the vase to the god in his sanctuary. The temples of the ancients were, as is well known, their museums, and the miraculously mended cup at Epidaurus was one of the carliest specimens of its hind. Their number has since grown to such an extent that at the present day it almost defies census. The collections of London, Berlin, and Naples have each some 4,000 catalogued specimens, while the public collections of Paris are said to contain about 8 ,ooo vases.

Compared, however, with some branches of antieguity, such as coins and goms, which hate leen the object of continuous study since the Ren sisance, the collection of Greck vases is a comr: ratively recent pursuit. The Medieval Chu h possessed dedicatory prayers to be prombunced abowe vases obtained by excavation and onsecrated to religious uses. Occasional Ine ens of painted vases occur in the works of $t$ antiquaries of the beginning of the cight wh century, but the first collcctions of a mode is kind, on a considerable scale, were not made It the second half of that century. At that time Sir Willian Hamilton, as British Minister at Naples, was favourably placed both for carrying on his own excavations on Campanian sites and for making purchases in the Neapolitan market. Of the two collections that he formerl, the first is in the British Museum. The second was in part lost by shipwreck, and in part brought to Englanl, and lost by dispersion. One piece was found a few

As engraved in the works of D'Hancarville and Tischbein, the Hamiluon wases hat a considerable effect on comemperary English art. Thus, a vase which is now in the British Museum (Ni. Ef 60 ) of a laureate poet was the source of the relief of "the $A_{p o t h e s i s ~ o f ~ H o m e r " ~ o f ~ W e d r w o w l, ~ a n t ~ t h e ~}^{\text {a }}$ engrave: outlines of such vases were the sumrce from which lilaxman drew inspiration for his outline illustrations to the great puets.

A seconll period in the sturly legan in 1828, when an accidental discovery of vases at Vulci (where two oxen steppert through the roof of a (umb) led to exravations, which were carried on for many years with great activity and extraordinary success. In place of the late and forid examples from Southern which they belong varies with the excavation periods described above. The South Italian vases are the promlucts of a late state of art, with sensuous outlines and florid decorative accessories. The proclucts of the Ftrurian excavations, belonging to, the early and prime periods of art, are of a severer schoul. Of the artists with whose names vases are sisnel, about a hundred in all are now known to us more or less from their works, and the greater numher of these are met with on Etruscan sites. The third period of excavations on Greek soil has yiehiod, as might be expected, a greater variety of wares. These are naturally spread over a long peri il of time, and include amongst them many sper al fabrics which were not brought to the Etri can market in the ordinary course of trade.

Jtaly, such as form the chief contents of the older collections, vases were found in immense numbers of an earlier and better perion, inscribed in many instances with the names of the potter and artist. The proceeds of these excavations have now, for the most part, been incorporaterl in the lating collections, such as the Vatican, the Lourre, the British Museum, Munich, and Berlin. The hirel perion may lee said whave hegun soon at er the middle of the nineteeluh rentury with exca ations in Greece prepper and on the Eastern shores if the Mediterranean. Tentative searches had alrea been marle in those regions iny travellers, such a Lorl Eigin, Dolwell, Burgon, and others, but sys matic and extensive excavation had hardly begul .efore the date namerl.

T rose public institutions that have been active during the whole period described have examples of vases belonging to all these classes. The collector, however, who begins lu-day will find that choice vases of what we have called the first wo perionls are not often now in private hands, and therefore seldom appear in the sale room. That it is still possible, however, if neither zeal nor means be lacking, to bring together a number of fine rases is shown by the annual reports of the lioston Museum of Fine Arts. Each year, for the last six years, the curator has been able to report accessions of good quality, taken for the most part from collections sold in Europe, such as those formed by the late Mr. Forman and Mr. Van Branteshem. Of course, in the case of vase; of the quality here referred to, the examples in the market are few, the competition is confined to a few buyers, and the prices are very long. Here however, as with books and prinis, the collector who does not propose to acpuire exceptional picces, or pieces likely to sell again at an increased price, but merely specimens that he can handle and storly, will find no difficulty in forming a farly representative collection of examples of the most important wares for a comparatively small sum. Several such collections have been formed of late in the museums which it is now customary to establish as an atjunct to the great public schools. In making these collections, the aim of the collector should be to acquire such examples as he can of the actual objects, logether with illustrations of the best that is known in each class. While jllustrations alone are lacking in actuality, originals alone, such as I am supposing to be within reach, would suggest that the performances of the ancients were but merliocre.

The illustrations that are here given may serve in a summary fashion to exemplify the most important stages in Greek ceramics. Archæologists of late years have paid great attention to the earliest wares of the period commonly known as Mycenæan and to those which mark the transition, still only dimly known, from Mycenæan art to that of historical Greece. Hut as a rule, the private collector, who wishes to study his vases as works of art rather than as historical evidences, will hardly care to begin before the rise of Greek art proper.

An archaic plate which was found at Camiros, in Rhodes, and is now, with all those that illus. trite this paper, in the collections of the liritish Museum, may exemplify the character of the tarly art of (irecce. The Gorgon Medusa strides along, holding a bird in each hand, a motive common enough in archaic works. Her tongue and tusks protrude from her open mouth, according to the type which for mant centuries served to express the horror of the Gorgon's face. But the most characteristic quality of the work is the extent to which it is pervaded by a feeling for decoration, father than for pictorial effect. The Gorgon's nose and the bird's wings are alike treated with purely conventional lines and patterns. The strictly symmetrical composition and the introduction of ornamental patterns in all the empty spaces of the fields further emphasize the decorative impression.

To examples of primitive art such as the above follow the two great groups of "blackfigured" and "red-figured" vases. The former are represented here by No. i., a jug, on which is depicted an incident in the wanderings of Odysseus. The artist now has a story to tell, though his power of expresssion is limited, and the method of treatment is largely laid down for him by tradition. The desire to decorate takes a subordinate place, and the essential facts of the story are told, but with the utmost ahrilgment of all accessory details. Odysseus, clinging below the ram, is seen escaping from the cav, of the Cyclops, and the Cyclops is seated at its entrance. He must needs sit, for if he stood he wo hat be too tall, and the artist cannot otherwise sol : the problem in composition. But the rocks and trees are purely comentional suggestions. Of the black-figured vases in general one may say that the story is the principal object. It is told us her with concise directness, and with rigid economy of letails. The instinctive desire for decorative patioms must obtain its satisfaction in the treatment of armone and the loke.

No. V.--monysos, tile maEnads and penthet
outer margin of the figure is drawn with a bold sweeping stroke, about a third of an inch wide, and the remainder of the fields is filled with solid black. The first broad line and the filling of the intermediate spaces can usually be distinguished if the surface is carefully examined at an oblique angle. A few examples also survive in which only the broad outline has been drawn, and the work has never been completed. The internal details are next drawn in fine lines of glaze. These lines are often of a peculiar quality, and the nature liarly in the fifth century b.c. the transition took place from the black-figure to the rell-figure manner of painting. What exactly was the nature of the change expressed by these terms may be learnt from a careful comparison of Nos. i. and iii. A few vases, but not very many, have been found, in which both strles occur together. Such vases are as a rule the wor!: of artists of the period of transition. In No. i. We have figures in the old black-figure style. They are Irawn in black, against the natural ground colour of the vase. The internal details must then be exp aseal by lines incised through the black to the gro. ind beneath, or, in some cases, by superimposed wh: sor purples. In the red-figured vases the operation and the effects are reversed. After a preliminary ske $h$ with a blunt point on the clay (not shown here and only sometimes to be distinguished) the of the instrument used has been much discussed. In the opinion, however, of the most recent and most competent authority, Herr Reichhold, it was simply a pointed pencil dipped in the viscous glaze.

With such methods the artist was able to attain a higher level than his predecessors, since he could abandon the conventional silhouettes and practise a more free and higher style of drawing. 'The change took place about the time of the Persian wars, aml the early masters of the red-figure style were, therefore, nearly contemporary with the great age of Pheidias.

The large vase (No. iii.) which is in a state of most admirable preservation, was obtained from the collection of the late Mr. Alfred Morrison. It must stand here to represent the finest manner of Athenian vase painting. On the front side we have a scene of combat beween a momed horseman and a foot soldier, assisted by a youth who bears a spear. On the: reverse side is a bibation scene.

In no long time, however, the restrained severity of the early masters of the red figured style was succeeded by a lighter mamer, such as is here by the heary conventional masses of black glaze wich press upon the outlines in a red-figured vase.

But it is in connection with a particular class of vases, specially painted for use in the rites about the tomb, that the Athenian methods of work on a white ground are most familiar. Such jugs, which, as Aistophanes says, were painted for the dead, usually bear subjects which may be brought into connection with death or the grave. Sometimes we have mythological sub. jects intimately connected with death, such as Chare n's boat, or the deposition of a warrior in his srave by gracious winged beings. Sometimes an crect tombstone is shown, with or without votive niferings about its foot, and, it may be, a tiny flitting shade hovering like some insect above it. More often, however, some action is being played by the living in the neighbourhood of the tomb. In No. ii. the young Athenian boy, with cloak, and traveller's hat, and flowing curls, makes a friendly gesture of salutation to the grave as he passes it on his road. No. vii. gives the same subject unrolled from the surface of the vase by the cyclo-graph-a photographic apparatus devised by the writer. In another group of vases the subjects remind us of the well-known Attic gravestones, on which we see a simple and pathetic figure of a person quietly occupied in his daily pursuits. Thus in the vase, of which a cyclographic illustration is given here (No. iv.), a woman is simply seaterl on her chair with her most necessary properties about her. She is holding up some kind of hoop, she has her wool basket on the floor behind her, and her ointment flask and cap suspended on each sitle. Here, as in the sepulchral relief, it is the utter simplicity of the theme and of its teatment that constitutes the special distinction of Greek art.

In the fourth century b.c. the period of de line sets in. The drawing tends to become weak, and the mythology vague. Finally, the practice of red figure vase painting is supposed to have died out alout the middle of the third century b.c.

THE INVENTION OF MEZ7OTINT HY ERNEST RAJFORI)

Taie fabulous English accounts of the mezotint would not have been current solong if we had sought information abroad. The Dutch painter Hondthorst referred to hereafter had a pupil and friend in Joachim Sandrart, a German writer and artist, who published between 1675 and 1679 an "Academia" of the various arts which gave the inventor his due, and explained the whole mater so clearly as to make it appear to be alrearly sell understood. The book, in falian originally, was issued soon after in Iatin, and most likely the later writers consulted the work in this form. There was no secret about it at all, and always excepting England, the only true story of the invention must have been pretly well-known everywhere. It did not rach England, howwer, in time to prevent some remarkable tales leing told, and when it actually did it was probably in consequence of Heinecken's "Idee géncrale d'une collection complete d'estampes," published in 1771, which named Von Siegen as the invintor. In 1778 , and then for the first time, the truth in plain English w.s tokl by James Chersum, the author of a compact little book on entraving, and Chelsum no doubt had his inform. ion from Heinecken.

itiea a little additional space is required: I refer speaking roughly, to the latter end of the sixteenth century, and to the morements in the art world which distinguish that period from others.

Chose familiar with this, the last chapter in the history of Italian art, need not be reminded, I think, that the post-Raphaclites were divided amongst themselves, the two main divisions being the Eclectics and the Naturalists. In the latter division were artists devoted to problems of chiaroscuro, and these, to narrow the distinction still further, were distinguished as Tenebrosi. A type of this section or group, and a very prominent firure, was the painter named Caravaggio, whose style, peculiar to himself, was remarkable for the startling effects of light which he renclered, and as these aspects of nature had never been presented in so striking a manner before, his appearance in Rome was eventful, but his influence there, though remarkable, had not the effect of saving the decadent art of ltaly : and it is rather to Holland and Spain that we must look for its after effects. It is enough, with regard to the latter, to name Ribera, Caravaggio's pupil; but the case of the I)utchman, Hondthorst, will seem more to the purpose, for we shall presently find hisn in England after years spent in Rome, where he adopted Caravaggio's style. A link between the Italian chiaroscurists and Kembrand is supplied by lastmann, his earliest master, for the later works of that painter are distinctly in Carawagsio's manner ; but mors direct and remarkable was the influence of Adam Elahemer, who also painted in Rome. It was probably the engravings after his works by his friend and patron. Comut Goumt, that marle Elahamer known in Holland.

In order to comect this preamble with the folluwing matter, I may mention the fact that three out of four mezzotints. the first ever published. were cop. ies by Sicgen himself of portraits by Hondthorst: that Prince Rupert's first, excepting, perbaps, the portrait of Titian, was an engraving after Ribera; and that by Wallerant Vaillant, also one of the earliest, there are copies of Elaheimur's works. I must also refer to the idea entertained by laborde that Rembrandt himself practised mezzotinting; but it is unfortunatefor those who hokl this opinion that there are no prints in existence to prove it. The author is amusing enough on this subject, and deserses to be quoted at length :-"I have renounced the pleasure:" he says, "of cataloguing any one of his works as a mergotint, but nevertheless retain my opinion that he actually did engrave in this manner, and the truth would appear to be that what he rid was rlone privately. The results were not publisherl, however, and would seem whave been destroyed for fear they would non compare favour ably with the masterly etchings on which his fame resterl." It is haril for a writer to part with a fonsl i.lea, and I would not deprive him of it. There are thousands of things which Rembrandt might have leen doing, but it will never be known whether he actually did this or rot, and we may as well arp the matter. 'Ihat he knew of the invention what seem to be almost certain, for Von Siegen's lirst prims appeared in Amsterlam while Rembodndt was resident there. It is natural that the discussion should have arisen, for Rembrandt and Von Siegen, both natives of Hollaml, were horn within two years of each other. The painter was the greatest of the chiaroscurists to to whose formative influence I have alluded, and produced a great many works, of which not a few have been engraved in this man. ner effectively. It may be suggested that if in his latter days there had been a general demand for engraved copies he would have given the work to the mezzotint engravers, but we are confronted with facts which do not favour the ida, for in $16+4$. or a little later, perhaps, the inventor left Holland, taking his secret with him, and there is nothing of prove or suggest that anyone practised the art during his absence. It may be added, besides, that there was little in the earliest prints, excepting their nowelty, to recommend them to one such as Fembrandt.

The discrourse until now has been intrulu wry merely, whereas the sul,ject of the artirle $i$, the history of the insention. The inventor, Lumi wim Siegen, was born in Hoilaml in 1609 , and the rincipal authority for what is known of him an his family is Laboriles "History of Mezantim En graving," which was publisherl in 1839 . We arn from this work that he came of a family of a ists, and that fate marle him a soldier. The fart may account for his meeting I'rince Rupert, of whom we shall treat later on. The two belonsed tw one country, and had their profession in common, so there is litule to excite remark in the mere fact of their meeting. The inrirlent was fateful, how. ever, and Challoner Smith, who followed I aborde, 1 suppose, gave the following account of the matter:-

"In $165+$ an event took place but for which it is highly proliable the invention would have perished with its authur, for at Brussels Von Siegen met with a kindrel spirit, also a soldier who, moreover, was skitled in the art of engraving, as evidenced by etchings of his which belong to his earlier years."

In $1 G_{4} 2$ Von Siegen presented to the Landgrave of Hesse an engraved portrait of his mother, Elizabeth the Landgravine (see fore 247), and with it a letter in forming his patron that the work was something quite new. In 1643 he completed and published the same, wgether with another portrait from a painting bug Hombloorst ; in $16+1$ wor portats, both after H intthorst: William Prince of Orange and Con-ort. sears. How the interval was spent 1 know mot, for I aborde only says as to this that Von Siegen's later engravings were produced either in Khineland or the Low Countries. The latest are dated 1654 and 1657.

Between Von Siegen and Rupert in posint of time - ones Theodore Caspar von Furstenbergh, with a print dated 1656 (see page 252), to be followed by others. Then came Rupert with a print dated 1657 (sepage 245), and then Jan Thomas, of Ypres, his but the portrait of Titian, 166 I , which is reproduced on this page. To Rupert belongs the credit of hating introduced the art to the English, but W.t he invented it can be proved to be simply a fa.le, for the date of the first mezzotint has been gi en, and that of l'rince Rupert's earliest. The st ey, however, is interesting, and bears a remarkable il eness to that which is told of the fabulous house w! irh Jack built ; for Walpole hat it from Vertue, Vitue from Killigrew, Killigrew from Livelyn, and Eselyn lirect from Prince Rupert. The following is Walpole's story:-"The Prince, woing out early one morning, observel the sentinel at some ristance from his post very busy doing something to his gun. The I'rince asked what he was aloum. He replien that the clew had fallen in the night, making his fusil rusty, and that he was scraping and cleaning it. The Prince, looking at it, was struck with something like a figure eaten into the barrel, with innumerable little holes close together, like pierced work on golli or sitver, part of which the fellow hatl scraped away. One knows what a mere gonel officer would have saic on such an occasion: if a fashionable one, he would simply have damned the poor fellow, and sent him away. But the l'rince, on whom nothing was lost, got the idea of mezzotinting engravin: from it. . . ." To this is added the statement that Rupert communicated the idea to W . Vaillant, a painter, whom he maintained, and that they kept on experimenting until they invented the roller. As necessity inventer lithography she might have invented this mote of engraving as well, hut the discovery was made, as we know, a long time before this meeting occurred; it would be difficult to prove that the Prince had anything io do with it, and the irlea that this may have heen an independent discovery seems th be hardly worth eatertainins. That a rule sort of print might be taken from a rusted surface of steel is quite true, amo one can imagine the Prince making use of this illustration in orrler to explain the matter (0) Exelyn.

Having given the l'rince his due, a word must he said about Wren, who was supposed for a while (t) have invented the art. The rumour anose in 1750, when Wren's "l'arentalia," a book relating to Wren and his forbears, appearel. Neither the author mor anyome else in Enpland had at that time hearl of Von Siegen, and as the opinion was general that Prince Rupert was the inventor, the statement marle by Wren's son may have seemed worth considering; and that statement was based on what follows from the "Journal of the Royal Society" October ist. 1662: "Dr. Wren presented some cuts cone by himself in a new way of etching, wherely he sairl be could almost as soon do a plate o:n a piece of brass as another could draw it wih a crayon on paper." Now this, I think, mak: it dear that Wren, the most ingenious man of his ase, most certainly did invent something; it sh uld he rememberel that fellow-members with hiv of this society were both Prince Rupert and Ei yn, and it seems very likely that he, the said lor. tor, having seen Rupert's prints, suggeste as an alternative a way of grounding the plat etching. With regard to the ugly "Moor's $h$ d" with which he is creditel, it is clearly an ry example, and as no one else clams it, we may as well give it to Wren. The opinion his relatives hedd was probably hased on some statement of his, and I should not be inclined to contest it. The Moors hearl has heen considered fair sport since the flight of Mahomet to Merca, and was one of the likeliest things for an amateur artist to practise upon. It was said by one writer distinctly that Wren's way of grawing differed from Rupert's, and coupling this with the statement that his was a way of etching, I submit, without maintaining, that what he invented may have been some sort of aquatilit. What remains to interest us regarding the notice of Wren as an interlude is the fate of the mezzotint after it came into England, and our first concern is with Evelyn, whose diary, dated March $13^{\text {th }}$, 1661, contains the following entry :"This afternoon. Prince Rupert showed me with his own hands the new way of graving called mescotinto, which I afterwards publishocd in my • History of Chalcography:"

The book here referred to, entited "Sculptura," was pulbished in 1662 with an appendix containing the author's account of "a new way of engraving communicated by his highness P'rince Rupert io the author of this treatise," and with this is included as irmaispiere a specimen mezurtint which was dune by Prince Rupert himself in weder to illustrate Evelyn's discourses. It is, in fact, but a part reduced for the purpose of Rupert's "Execution of

ARCHDUKE I.EOMOI.J: WIIJ.JAM
Hy 1HEOJORF: CASPAR VOS FURSTESTEROII

John the baptist," after Ribera's painting ( 1,58 ). Apart from its merit, which is unquestioner!. the print is of interest as being the first to be publashed in England. There could not have been a more telling advertisement than this same specimen piate, and the news of the invention spread very quickly. It is mentioned by Pepys more than once, and in 3669 , only seven years later, there appeared from the pen of Mr. Alexander Dirowne, engraver, dealer, and publisher, a volume called "Ars Pictoria," which is further described as an "Academia," treating of painting. limning, and ctching. There is added to this an appendix cxplaining the "manner or way of mezotint," and also an adver. tisement of the neces. sary instruments. Mr. Browne held letters patent, it seems, giving him some sort of monopoly, and no nalue is seen oftener than his on prints of this period. It is chear that this information was given because it was known to be wanted, and we know that there were many at work already, though of English only a fuw. Dy William Sherwin there is a print dated 1668 (see page 248), and this, I belicve, is the earliest English work, unless I'rince Rupert's is counted. To Abraham Blootelin: who seems to have visited England in 1672, is attr , uted a certain improvement in the tool or the pess. His works, considering their dates, are amon: : the finest we have (see pare 247), and there is 1: thing more like mezzotint proper than these.

PI.ATE AT THE CAMBRIDC: COTLEGFS No. I. TRINITY COLIEEGE
BY H. I. CATIINO

Ftrst in importance among the eighteen colleges comprising the University of Cambridge must be placed the royal foundation of 'Trinity, and it is but fitting, therefore, that any subject which treats of the University should give the precedence to this famous socicty. Founded in 1546 by King Henry VIll., who amalgamated several carlier institutions, the buildings, which were insufficient for the reception of Queen Elizabeth, grew so rapidly that they afforded ample accommodation for King James I., who repaitedly visited the college, and kept his Court there for 1 wo several years.

This, I think, justifies us in assuming that the college plate was, at least, not inferior to that beiong ing to the other foundations of the University, though the only specific bequest I can find recorded among (arter's list of benefactors is that of 1)r. (roldsborough (Hishop of (iloucester, 1598 ), who left the college "a Piene of embossed Plate of soo Marks Val." But since there are still extant four pieces with hallmarks anterior to the Revolution, it is evident that the records of such gifts must have been destroyed. This is the more probable, seeing that the college contributed practically the whole of its plate to supply the needs of King Charles I., on which acoount I.r. Thos. Comber was deprived of the Mhtership and I)r. Cheyney Row was dispossessed of his Fellowship and College living. One other pire would seem to have survived the Civil War, o: to fall into the hands of thieves, ziz: John ' "kson's Pot, commonly known as Pamper foan. 1 , was stolen in 1798, on which occasion the Col-
ath mumerous other utensils, a reward of $£ 100$ in. : offered for information which should lead to the "conviction of the offender or offenders." The butteries had also been broken into three years previously, but suffered a comparatively slight loss, no more than six cups, one salt, and sixty-cight spoons being stolen. In view of these misfortunes, it is satisfactory to record that "hardly three ounces" of plate have been lost during the last thirty years, a fact which "speaks much for the care, as well as the honesty of the innumerable hands through which it has passed." There is, however, one further point to be noticed in dealing with the plate of this college, viz.: it will be found that the hall-mark on very many pieces is considerably later than the date of presentation, either so engraved upon the piece itsclf, or as inferred from the date of the donor's admission to the college. From entries in the college accounts and elsewhere it would seem to have been a frepuent practice to send original gift-pieces to I ondon, sometimes in very considerable quantities, to be melted down and exchanged for meze plate. In some cases, no doubt, important portions of the original article may have been retained, or its gencral pattern noted, and more or less aceurately reproduced ; but in others, again, it would secm that the substituted article was of entircle new design. The yar 1746 was cortainly one of the oceasions abowe mentioned, and no beeter example of the usual practice can be found than in the case of an ale mug, which bears the hall-mark of this year, while the inscription reads, Domum Tho Balimutom, 16j6. So much for losses sustained in the past.

We will now turn to a consideration of the plate still in the possession of the college. The oldest pieces for ale jugs on this account, since it is impossithe to suppose that the officating priest should ever have whisterd for a further supply of wine during the Communion Scrvice.

Next, in point of age, is the Nevile Cup, illustrated on the opposite page, which bears the hall-mark of 16.5-16. Its present weight is 950 ss . 19 dwt ., though it is marked 124 dz . less 2 daets. But this difference is accounted for by the fact that it originally possessed a cover, which is estimated to have weighed at least $380 \%$. The lower part of the bowl was renewed in 1871, and about 13 ozs. were added to give it the

are the two communion flagons (see page 260) with hall-mark of $1607^{-8}$, each weighing 49 ozs. is dwt. They are thus described in the College llate look: Silver-gilt bellied fagons, on circular feet, with three borders to them; plain shaped handles, with heartshaped end-pieces, engraved; whistle underneath; lid and thumb-piece (cast) ; lid jointed on to handle; bellies chased with shells and dolphins; donor's arms above shell. Inscription below rim, in dot cingraving : Ex dono pracuobilis Domini Johamais (on the other Pernardi) Stuart Piratris Illustrifs: Domini Jacobi Duis Leematue natu quarti (on the other quinti at minimi) 1636 . Height of each, with lid, $3 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. Particular attention may be called to the whistle which is attached to each of these flagons, and it seems probable that they were originally designed same thickness as the upper part ; hence the ahove calculation. At this time, ton, a proper nut and screw were inserted in place of the plain loose screw which previously connected the bowl and the stem, since it sometimes happened that as the cup was passci, from one to another at the undergraduates' table on "'a ast bays, the howl was tonsened from the stem. with disastrous consequences, for it is on record th ton more than one occasion the two parts separe: das the holder tilted it towards his lips, and ali th contents went over him. ## The Plate at Trinity College, Cambridge

It $n$ y be noted that this cup was formerly gilt, and is so lescribed in the catalogue of 1789 ; also that a repl: a (with dome lid) was presented to the present Ma- ir of the college (Rev. IOr. Butler) on the owe ion of his marriage to Miss Ramsey in 1888.

I irdly, there are the Rosewater Basin and Ewer $(16,35-6)$ which were presumably presented by the Bur or of that time. The basin is covered with arms and inscriptions, which run thus: on the outer rim und meath, Mensae Thesaurariorum andiwi operam: on the upper side, in centre, donor's arms; Royal (Stuart) Arins; /homi soit qui mal $y$ pense, and crest with supporters; in ribbons below, Recati pacifici. On the outer rim are three sets of arms :-(i) The Ľniversity Arms, plain, without supporters, different quarterings, with Mars Musas in ribions below; (2) Plain arms, three stags' heads, with Jartion Patriac in ribbons below; (3) The college arms, plain, with the motto Virtus zera molilitas in ribbons below. There are also three scrolls pointed to by an engraved hand:-(t) "TH"AIIA IPPIADI IIANDOEIA"; (2) "E'ГI TO THS TPIADOE EYGHNIA" (? with ró supply ri^п̆ur) ; (3) "AL.M.E NVTRICI C.S.I..N. $163^{\circ}$ ' (Votum sobvit lubens mutrito). The basin has a diameter of $22 \frac{3}{4}$ ins., and weighs $950 \% \mathrm{~s} .5$ dwt. The ewer is plain and stratght, with lip and handle. On the rim at the base is the same inscription as that on the bottom of the dish, while the cup is also inscribed with (i) the Royal Arms, the motto of the Carter, and in ribbons below, Beati facifici : (2) a stag's head on a turret, in two lautel wreaths; diohs non solum in ribbons below. The weight of this piece is 35 ozs. 10 dwt. ; its height, 9 ins. ; and its diameter, $5 \frac{1}{2}$ ins., while both bear the hall-mark of $3635^{-6}$. The dedication of this plate to the Bursar's table renders it probable that it was a Bursar who gave it, and the name Ambrosius Aykerod (corrupted by oral tradition into Acright) appears as holding both Bursarships about this date. But what was his vow, or the occasion for his thank-offering, and why the Stuart Arms? Did he leave Cambridge for any Court appointment, or is it simply a pledge (implied in the condixi) which he gave when in office, and redemed in 1636 ? These are unanswerable quesions. The pieces appear at the left of the grou: on page 256.

Aorber moteworthy Rosewater Basin and Ewer is tiot given by the Earl of Kent in 1662 , to commen rate the passing of the Aet of Uniformity. Botb are quite plain, the former being engraved on the b, per face with ( $I$ ) the donor's arms and crests with upporters, and the motto in ribbons: firy est tout and (2) the college arms wreathed with moth. An inscription in the centre runs, "NlPON

ANOMHMATA MH MONAN Od]N" (this reads alike backwards and forwards), while that round the rim is "Collegrio S.S"ar et Individutae Trinitatis Dono Dedit Antonius Comes Cantii A.D. quo Denuo decretu ut sit Vnlfor Miras, sIr luc Cok religioni, Confordils Clarve aC sal,Va eCCliesIa." This is particularly interesting as an example of a double chronogram, the raised capital ketters of the latter part of the inscription totalling $332+$ (i.e., twice 1662 )

The diameter of the basin is $22 \frac{1}{2}$ ins., and of the ewer, $6 \frac{1}{2}$ ins., the height of the latter being $9 \frac{1}{4}$ ins.

Trinitutis domazit in suam et frotris su: $D^{\text {ni }}$ Trancisa memorian $A^{\circ} D^{\prime \prime} 1671$. The wei he of the basin is 250 ors. 13 dwt., and its diameter 27 ins. As illustrating the exterit of its circumference, at may be noted that this picee has somctimes been afered to visitors on condition that they should encircle it with their arms, but so far no one has suceceded in accomplishing the task. The ewer is quite plain, the arms on it being similar to those on the basin. It stands $\mathrm{m} \frac{1}{4}$ ins. high, has a diameter of 7 ins., and weighs 68 ozs. $18 \mathrm{~d} v \mathrm{t}$. 'The halimark on both pieces is that of $1671-2$, and is especially good on the latter. In this connection it is interesting to note that in the Senior luursar's book for 1672 appears the following:

For ye Basin and Ewer given by His Grace the $.099 \quad 15$ of Duke of Buckingham to ye Colledge
For engraving it;
and for ye Case 02 of of and a Box ...

It would be a little rash in assume from this that the Juke simply ordered th: plate and left the Colluge to pay for it, though this is far from impossible. He might, perhaps, have given the College $£$ ioo and told them to get a piece of memorial

The two, together, now weigh 124 ozs., as against 178 ozs in 1789 . The date letter is rubbed, and so uncertain. Mr. Chaffers attributes it to 1660 , but, it may equally belong to 1662 , in which year the pieces were probably made to arder. These are shewn on the right of the group on page 25 .

A third basin and ewer bear the name of (ieorge Villiers, Inte of Buckingham, who was Chancellor of the University, 167r-jt. The basin, which is quite plain, has the donor's arms with crest, supporters and motto in ribbons, fidet coticula cras, engraved on the rim, together with the college arms in a wreath. The inscription runs: Georgius Drex Buckingrhamite Acad. Cantat C.INCELIARILS Collesio S.
plate with it, just as in later times the noblemen and fellow-commoners paid a specified sum of money on admission, which was afterwards converter! into plate, and their names engraved upon it. The basin and ewer appear at the top of the group. The: College also possesses a rosewater ewer, of hich Mr. Cripps says the date is "close upon "75." He is confident, too, that it was originally a st, wing cup, and that the spout has been added at . later date. The piece stands $10 \frac{1}{4}$ ins. high, has a di acter of $5 \frac{1}{2}$ ins., and weighs 35 ozs. 3 dwt. On $t$ arb engraved the College and Westminster Arms, nd it is probably the cup that figures in carlicr cata sues as "Hr. Rusby's Cup and Cover," thereby nai rally" havin: the Westminster Arms on it. It secms likely what i was converted into its present form from a desire to bring this token of the close association betwe il Trinity and Westminster into more prominent and tr quent use.

Th chalice and paten illustrated on page 260 are mix of a pair, silver-gilt, of which the date is described as "alipout 1670 ." The chalice is rol $\frac{1}{4}$ ins. high, and has :: diameter of $5 \%$ ins. There are two other pations among the Communion Plate, which are aliks in workmanship and irobathly of equal date, thoust one of them has no moth. The other bears the ather date of $5661-2$. These are $2_{x}^{1}$ ins. in height, and have a diameter of 9 ins. The college alms dish (now disusid) has the hall-mark of 10734 , and weighs 114 ons. 10 dut. Its diameter is 2 ims . On the base of the rimare engraved the college arms and the donor's arms with crest flowered. The inscription runs: Ex dono Kollerti Crane Doctoris in Iure Cisili et Sacrosanctae at Indiciduac Trinitatis Collegij c Smijs senioribus. It was formerly gilt.

Anong the covered cups are three that call for notice. The lisst bears the hall-mark of $16 y 1-2$. Its height is $x_{\frac{1}{2}}^{2}$ ins., its diameter $13 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. and its weight, 115 ozs. 10 dwe. It is thus inscribed: Fr duno Caroli Firebrace Irm. of Georsij fratris ejus Filiarum D"i Basilij fïrelbace Militis at Baronetti. The necond (see page 258) dates from the year $1697-8$, tands 8 ins, high (with cover, 12 ins.), has a diameter of 9 ins., and weighs 82 ozs. 5 dwt. The inseription read - E.v dono Henrici Borle fill. Sec. l'ice Comitis *f ('ifford, Nep. Richardi Comitis de Burlington. The hird belongs to the reign of Queen Anne, and hastied date letter of 1711-12. It is the smallest of the - rrece, its height being $7 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. (with cover, (1t m.), its diametcr, 7 ins., and its weight, $\therefore$ : 7 dwe The inscription runs: Ex dom What is lerney de Medio Clevdon in Com. THE AISTOX TANKARI

Tankards form another large class, the oldest bearing the hall-mark of $1698-\mathrm{g}$. Its beight to the top of the lid is $8_{1}^{3}$ ins., its diancter, 6 ins., its weight. 63 ozs. 7 dwt., and its capacity, 3 quarts. It is inscribed: Ex dono Petri Phesaunt Armigeri de Upreood in comitath /huntingdonichisi. Another, which is illustrated on this page, belongs to the year $1699 \cdot 1700$. It is 9 ins. high to the top of the lid, has a diameter of 6 ins., and weighs 52 ozs. 14 dwt., its capacity being also 3 quarts. This is a particularly fine specimen, and may be thus described: an upright tankard with fluted gadroon chasing round body; lace-work above, and stars beneath ; wery broad gadroon chasing at base, with fluted lace-work above, and leaves 5 and 3 alternately. larpe plain handlewith beads and shield at bottom. Iid with broad gadroon and slanted fluting, surrounded by leaves. Piereed lip-piece. The inseription reals: Ex domo Thumae ASton Armis, filii natu maximi Ruarlandi Allston (sic) Barronet' de IWoudhill in Com. Bedford. Other "whistle" tankards in the colition belong to the years 1739, 1746, 1751, 17,7 and $176 \%$. And here may be mentioned the nim: covered tankards which are described in the cai dogue as "Ale Plates," a Pate of Ale being the expression still used at Trinity for one of the silver tankards purchased by fellow-commoners for their own use, and left by them as a parting present to the college. the College possesses upwards of one hundred pairs of candlesticks, of weights varying from 30 to soo ozs. per pair, and that the total weight of the plate is about 30,000 ozs., the bulk of which belongs to the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

Of especial interest among the modern pieces is the "Queen's Plate," which was purchased for use at the dinner given by the College on the occasion of the wisit to Cambridge of Queen Victoria and l'rince Albert, when the latter was installed as Chancellor of the University (July 6th, 1847). As

The fact may also be noted that the service has never been used since that day.

In conclusion, I desire to express my indebtedness to the Council of the College for granting me permission to have the plate photographed, and to the funior liursar (Mr. J. W. Capstick, M. If truth is tu be told, I have never as yet met with any amateur who collected hooks for the sake of the printers mark at the beginning or ent of them. But it has always seemed to me that it would $b e$ an agrevable varicty of book-collecting to do this, and one which would lead the collector along many by-paths of curious knowledge For fear of any possible mistake, I should perhaps cmphasize the point that the collection must be one not of printers' marks cut out from books, but of books in which the marks are printerl. Fiven in the rase of book-plates, it has often been moted how much they gain in interest when they are found in situ, though there is always the haunting fear that the conjunction of book and plate may only he due to the ingenuity of the realor. Book-plates, however, have of right a separate existence apart from books. since they are marle se, mately and must await their owners plea-

Device of momovi and barkevelt sure before they can be set to their proper work. But the prin ter's device is an integral part of the book in which it occurs, nor can any lim:pei torn from its rock look more un. haply than wae of these marks cut out from the page on which it was printed and pasted in a scrap-book. U゙nhappily, it must be said that, like the book plate, though more rarely, a device is sometimes found attached to a book to which it does not belong. Thus, in the last Inglis sale an edition of a Defensorium Curatornm by an unknown French printer, was catalogued as from the press of Colard Mansion on the score of Mansion's device, cut out with extraordinary neatness, being pasted on the last leaf. The buyer of it certainly bid with open eyes, but it is annoying to pay even a few shillings more because of such a freak. So, too, a leaf with Caxton's device bound at the end of pyonson's edition of the .Specturn lïtue Christi led the late Mr. Blates to believe that leynson was Canton's apprentice. But these mis. deeds or mishaps are exceptional, and it is the collector of scraps, from lagford downwards, whom the printer's device hats chiefly to fear.

1WVICE OF J. 1B. SFSSA FIFIEENTE-SJXTEHNIH CKXIVIV all of them, when duly studied, are capable of throwing consider able light on the history of printing, more esperially on the often important point of the order in which books were issued and the year, or ex.m the month, to which an umdated book belongs. P'erhaps from the fact that the Anchor and Dolphin which Aldus adopted as his derice were conterfeited with evil intent, it has sometimes been said that the derices were used as trade marks to protect the copyright of the books in which they occur. Copyright as such did not exist in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and broks could only be protected by their printer obtaining a special "privilege" either for an individual book or for books of a particular kind. With this the derices had nothing to do, and although a pleasing design often begat a whole progeny of similar ones, this copying, when it was not merely lazy, was probably complimentary rather than compectitive. We must take it that the devices were purely ornamental, aiming, no doubt. at the glorification of the printers who used them, but not possessing any commercial significance. Hence, perhaps, the variety w: find in them. They may be simply persomal, containing only the printer's private arms or in some few cases his portrait. They may join his initials or some motto of his choicto the arms of the city in which he worked. or to some more or less graceful scroll-work. They may reproduce the sign of his shop or the figure of his patron saint ; or listly. a kind much in vogue in the sixteenth con tury, they may be allegorical. As we should expect, there is a fairly steady movement from simplicity to ormateness. The carliest device (the first of our illustrations). that used by Fust and Schoffer at the ond of the Latin bible they printel at Main\% in 1462 , consists only of two shath slung from a branch. The second. hat of Arnold ther Hocrnen, of Col anc (about 1770 ) is even more monlest. A few ears later Giunther Zainer, of Augshurg, showed ar ater ambition in his mark, which represents a wild nan holling a shiell, on which is a crowned lion am pant. But though Schoffer, ther Hoernen ind Zainer thus lerl the way, their example was ery litite followed in Germany during the fifteent entury, and it is in wher commeries and in the 1 wks

levet，Jean Lambert，and one or two other French printers at Paris used some of the features of the normal Italian design，though in a far more elaborate and decorative form；while at I，yons，where Italian influence was always strong, simple copying was thought good enough.

But the typical French device is much more picturial than any of these. The arms of France and of the city of Paris are prominent in many of them, and in that of André Bocard both are used at once: but the printer used often to take a suggestion from his Christian name, from the sign by which his shop was known, or from the motto with which most early French devices are encircled. The second device of Antoine Caillaut is a beautiful and carly example of the appearance of a patron saint in a device; while that of the two swans used by Du Pré, whose printing house had the "Deux Cygnes" for its sign, is an example of the second class. Both of these are incidentally reproduced in my little treatise on Early Illustrated Books. The device here chosen for our second French illustration I take to be an example of the pictorial expansion of a motto, Regnault's expression of trust in God being well represented by this quiet little pastoral seene (see page 265).

Though far inferior to the best French examples, the printers marks used in the Low Countries are also numerous, varied and good. They range from the twin shields of Veldener and Gerard I.eeu to such imposing devices as the elephant and howdah used, with punning intent, by an unknow, printer (" G.D.") at Gouda, and the bannered castle, the arms of the city of Antwerp, adopted by Thierry Martens. Among the carliest are the small portraits of the printers themselves found in some of the trooks of John and Conrad, of Paderborn, in Westphalia. That of the former, reproduced on page 267 , is sometimes found in red ink as well as black, and is referrel to in one of his colophons as " meum solitum signum." The bird-cage used ly, Goulfriw Back at Antwerp has no parallel among devices that 1 know of, but as a sperimen of the larger Dutch marks we will take that of his fellowcitizen, Matthias van der Gocs, which represents a very rigorous "wild man" with club and shield (see pase 264).

Spanish devires are in some cases alapted from the lirench or halian, in others rather dull and uninteresting. Of those which belong to neither of these classes, 1 y far the finest as a piece of de urative work is that of Diego de Gumiel, of Vallatolid (see page 265), the effect of which is as rich as thet of the best of William Morris's initial letters.

Next in interest to this we may perhaps rank the rather claborate device (see poge 263) of Armold Guillem de Brocar, the primter of the Complutensian Polyglot, who at different times in his career had presses also at four other places. The motto upon it, "Inimici hominis domestici ejus," though it has been made the basis of some theories as to Brocar's career, is still unexplained. If the "domestici," the "those of his own houschold," could be extended to Brocar's workpcople, we should have here a fine example of an early grumble by a master printer, but the suggestion is perhaps more pleasing than probable. Cryptic mottoes xem to have run in Brocar's family. His son Juan adopted an extraordinary device of a knight seizing a lody by the hair, with an inscription "Legitime certanti," which must be taken as sarcastic.

The history of printers marks in England begins with that used by Caxton for the first time as late in his career as 1487 . Out of respect for his master. Winken de Worde adophed the essential parts of this. i.e., the initials "W.C." and the interlacenent between them in all his fifteen different devices. thus conferring on them a rather painful monotony. English primets, indeed. seem to have set little store on originality in these matters, the carlicet devies of P'ynson being adapted from that of 1e Talleur, of Rouen, that of Richard Fapufrom Thielmann Kerver's, the "wild men" of Peter Treveris from those of Pigouchet, and puhn lixddells unprepossessing figare of Virtuc from that used by Jarques Sacon, of Lyons. Neverthe less, English devires at once interesting and oriz. na! are not lacking. 'That used by Pynsen at the wl of Lord Berner's translation of "Froissatt" (sect ? 4 e $2\left(6_{3}\right)$ is one of the largest and not the laast lin of armorial marks, the interlaced triangles of Will am Faques make a singularly neat device, and John I iss pieture of two men gazing on a skeleton, with the motto," Disi mors indies accelerat vivet tamen st funera virtus," has its own merits. England 'at contributes two of the very small number of p : it

It seemed permissible to rint down as late as this in the case of our own comtry, but to speak of the French and German de ires of the midrle of the sixteenth century would "prn up too large a field. All that has been atempted here is to give a few characteristic examphes of comparatively early date, so as to exhibit the 'lifferent styles of printers' marks used in different amuties by one generation of printers. I hope that any uf my readers who had not bitherto mate the acquaintance of these little designs will have been consincell that they are worthy of further study.
dnyone who desires to take up the subject more "r k's seriously will find a considerable literature ready to his hand. To Messrs. Bell & Co,'s " Dix l.ibris" series Mr. William Roberts has contributed a pleasant volume, which, though not without errors and written rather discursively, offers an easy introduction for beginners. More scrious students will find an almost exhaustive series of woodeut copies of French devices in Silvestre's Maryues tyonrophiques, [^19]and much pretticr foc similes abound in M. Claudin's great Histoire de I'Imprimerie en France, though this as yet treats only of l'aris printers of the fifteenth contury, l'or Italy I Pr. Kristeller's Die Ifalienischen Buchdrucker und Verlegrerzeichen bis 1525 is excellent, and its publishers (Heitz © Mundel) have brought out similar monographs on the marks used at Strasburg, Basel, Frankfort, and Cologne, and also in Spain and Portugal. The carlier Low Country marks will be found in Holtrop's Monumens toposraphiques des Pars-Bas. The carlier English ones in the Handlists of Emglish Printers issued by the Bibliographical Societs:

As to collecting, it is certainly a little alarming to have to buy a whole book for the sake of a single device in it, or at most two. On the other hand the books are pleasant things in themselves, and there is an alleviation in the fact that the devices only begin to abound a little before 1490 , and that books of this date can be acquired, even now, at prices which seem reasonable compared with those fetched by the real first-fruits of the press. Many very pretty devices will be found in the thin volumes of latin verse published at l'aris in the early parts of the sixteenth century, and a bookman who meets a "tract-volume" containing several of these bound together, will probably find sufficient devices among them to start his collection.

Remarks about Lace and Pattern Books The theory has been long entertained that the germ of this beautiful and fascinating pronluct is to be found in the meshes of the fisherman's net; but a species of sea-weed, lermed Alcyonaria, also bears a strong resembiance to lace. It is by no means clear where the earliest pattern books originated, and the circumstance that the first with a date ( 1527 ) was from a Cologne press, is nut a conclusive title to German priority.

A quite recent discovery in this class of work is a slender oblong octavo volume lent to us by Messrs. Ellis and Elvey, and bearing the foilowing itle:"A Booke of Curious and strange Inuentions, called the first part of Needleworkes, containing many singular and fine sortes of Cut-workes, verie easie to be learned by the dilligent practisers, that shall follow the direction herein containerl. Newlie Augmenterl. First Imprinted in Venice, and now againe newly printed in more exquisite sort for the prowit and delight of the Gentlewomen of England. For William liarley. 1596." The book is dedicated by Barley to lsabel, Dowager Countess of Rutland.

So far so good. But all that there is of English origin seems to be the title and other introluctory matter-four leaves (including a blank one); the remainder is almost certainly a reprofuction from the Italian plates, and in this copy runs to fifteen leaves. There is a certain amount of curiosity and interest in the publication; but it is far less valuable than the one described in the bibliography appenderl to the Comtesse de Clermonts French version of Mrs. Búry Palliser's well-known work, 189:, p. 3 r4. It is a noticeable circumstance that the illustrations in the latter are far superior to those in the English original, and are altrgether the best with which we have met in any book of the kind, ancient or modern.

Many years ago, Mr. Andrew Carnegie purchased the library of Lord Aeton, at Aldenham, near Bridenorth, shropshire, but arranged that Mr. Andrew Carnegie's
Library it should remain intact. A catalowe of a portion of it had been already compiled with a view to a sale by auction, and was actually printed. Some hundreds of copies are on the premises; and a second catalogue of the entire collection is preserved in MS. It is a very exhaustive assemblage of miscellaneou, literature in all languages, emphatically worthy ot so distinguished a scholar as the noble lord who formed it. We do not exactly know whether this or an independent library is referred to in a recent pros paragraph which states that Mr. Carnegie has brought together at Skibo Castle, under the advice of loord Acton, a lilrary of about eight thousand volums. It reads as if it were one and the same thing.

(1. all modern critics and writers on Italian pain ns none is more absolutely indepenclent, more self-reliant, than Mr. Burnhard Berenson. Lorizo He believes in nothing but the eviLotto dence of his own eyes and personal inve !igation, and never allows himself to lee inHuemed by the opinion of other acknowlectred experts. His logical reasoning is, moreover, so convincing that any new attribution by him of some Lialian master's work may almost be accepted as delinite, and is hardly ever contested by other anthorities.

Mr. Kerenson's Lorenzo Lotto, of which a new and considerably amplified edition has just been pulblished by George Bell and Sons, is a book of supreme interest not only as regards the new light threwn upon a comparatively dark period in the hisury of Venetian painting, but even more so hecause it affords a clear insight into the methods ly means of which he arrives at his conclusions and reronstructs the life and artistic character of the sulhert of this essay-methods which are closely akin to those employed by a keen detective in following up a slight clue. In the first chapter the author does not try to record the history of Lotto's tarls years and the gradual development of his art, bui-without any introductory remarks-proceeds to lay before his readers the irrefutable evidence of signerl and dated early works by the master, from which he afterwards draws his conclusions as in Lutos artistic descent. Dates and morphological details galore are enumeraterl to prove that Iotto was not a pupil of Giovanni Bellini-a theory which had been hitherto universally accepted, but of Alvise Viatini, to whom the author accords a supremely eminent position among the early Venetian masters ty establishing his more or less direct influence over Jaropo di Barbari, Antonello da Messina, Bonsignori, Montagna, and Cima da Conergliano, all of whom show decidedly Alvisesque traits, such as prominent mistrils, clumsy fingers which separate off directly from the joints of the palm, feet awkwardly placed at risht angles or parallel, with the big toe shorter than the other toes, clraperies tending to fall in parillel or angular folds, cold colouring with strongly ron:rasted lights and shades, etc.
f'it Mr. Berenson goes further and, having proved the influence of Alvise, tries to work back from the pul s to the master: "Alvise's forms and manner ns remain the forms and mannerisms of Antonio and Bartolommeo Vivarini. Only a small part, a mer percentage of Alvise's work, has come down to us: we are, therefore, justified in assuming that if a had his entire arorks ne should discoier in them all the forms and mannerisms are comnot fisd in thic woorks that remain, but which rop up in his fupils and exist in his predecessors. Lotto, we may therefore assume, did not take the hand of his St. Thomas from Antonio and Barcolommeo directly, but from Alvise himself, who, we may be sure, had it in works now lost. As this is the only explanation pussible, its evidence also goes to prove Lotto's descent from Alvise" (!)

This kind of reasoning may be very anusing and ingenious, but can hardly be accepted as positive proof of the facts the author tries to establish.

The system of forgeries at present in operation extends to all classes of antiquities and valuable curiosities-ancient implements, coins, Forgeries medals, prints, china and puttery, stamps, and books. Some are more susceptible of detection than others. Perhaps the least so are reprints of reprints, where some rare piece by Byron, Shelley, Tennyson, or Browning has been reproduced in a very limited number of copies, and the demand and price tempt the ingenious manufarturer to take off a second small impression, which may be intrinsically as good as the first, yet is, nevertheless, a palpable fraud. The utterance of a worl of warning may be serviceable to the less experienced inquirer for these objects, since the point is that for the worthless roplica the same figure is asked as for the article which it counterfeits.

It is the same in the foreign series as in our own. The amateur who searches for autographs of Napoleon outside mere signatures to official documents, which are fairly common, should be very cautious, as from the rarity of holographs specimens are fabricated to take their place. A Paris house holds the dies of some of the coins struck in the name of Henri V. of lirance, and no doubt those with the titles of Napoleon II, can be similarly multiplied at pleasure. It almost seems that nothing can nowarlays hecome scarce and costly which there is not an immediate attempt to foist on the collector in the form of a spurious copy. The exposure and discouragement of such impositions should be as wide as possible. I! is to be regretted that there is a difficulty in publishing the names and adrlresses of the offenclers. Pictures are, of course, perpetually copied, but they are not often forgerl in the ordinary sense. A singular instance to the contrary was once offered at a public sale, where a likeness of Charles II. harl had a head of Charles I. painterl in without considering the anarhronistic drapery, as the martyr was expected to prove unter the hammer a more saleable lot than the Merry Monarch.

Robert ili= l'lers's charning troubadour story could not possibly have a setting more dainty and yet at the same time more mag. nificent than the lithographic vignettes and pare lecorations, 132 in number, by A. Mucha, to which has been added an embossed relief title by Alex. Charpentier. Every page has a special design, sumetimes purely decorative, sometimes realistic; always faultless as regards taste and draughtsmanship. The designs are kept in outline with flat tints of delicate rolours, houes and yellow prelominating, and pro. fusely enriched with silver and gold. Eight humalred coples have been printed of the book, which canmot fail to appeal to collectors of modern art pub. lications.

The term is marle to cover ani describe an enormously varied borly of coins struck at a barely numerable series of mints; but the main point is that it is gravely misleading. loor in fact, the gold tricntes and other pieces so denominated. and bearing a strong general affinity in fabric and style, issued from localities in nearly every part of Western Eurrpe, including England, and werr producen, as it is now usually believed, by moneyers travelling from place to place, and exeruting buther some recognised authority a limited output or this money for a more or iess immediate or speria. purpose. The rarest examples, however, are I wont - loulot those emanating from the regal mint the Merwings at Paris, and presenting in certain ases pertraits and titles, as well as the seat of $m_{1}$ hage and the name of the moneyer. W ev I was examining the early English books at ( pus Christi College, Cambrilge, a year or so ago, through the kindness of Mr. Moule
An (writes a correspondent), I met with Inte sting a sery small duodecimo volume bound Dise very up with others, which immediately arrested my stention and gladdened my hart. For it was a perfect copy of a tract, of which my knowledes had been so far limited to two fragmentsone in the British Museum and the other sold at a public auction in Iondon. The title is: "The enquirie and verdite of the quest panneld! of the death of Richard Hune wich was founde hange. 1 in Lolars tower." Hune was a member of the cilld of Merchant Taytors, and a reputed Lollard. The Lollards" Tower here mentioned was part of wh St. Paul's. The narrative is reprinted by Fox. Bui I am now enabled to state that the separately puldished piece has no place and printer's name, and musl have appeared some time after 1514 ; it consists of 16 leaves, $a_{4}, b 8, c 4$, and at the end occurs: "Thmas Barnewell, Crowner of the Citie of London." This was the coroner who presided over the inqquest.

I imagine his objection to split g his collection arose from a fear of being teri ith a bot of unsaleable resilue; also from a ke , appreciation of his own ignorance of the real marl i value of many of his best specimens, and a conse puent fear of being picked up ly those who Were setter posterl in current prices.

 offered for sale in the various L ondon auction rooms. Masterpices are still iww and far between, but both at Christie's and elsewhere there have lately appeared a goodly number of pictures of very real merit, and it may be stated at once that the prices of good works are again this yar showing material advances on those previously attatied. This fact wats emphasized at Christie's on Ficbruary $22 n d$ when a picture by Constant Troyon, Cattle and Shect, arith a J'easant II iman in a II oode Posture, reached the enormous sum of 7,000 guincas. Hhe last occasion upon which an important Trojon was sold by auction in Iondon was that of the Mieville Sale, in April 1809 . Mr. I. I.. Mieville had, among ohors, wo works by this master, of slightly larger dimensions than the one sold a few weeks ago with the colketion of the late William Waring, Esq. ; one of the two, entitled The Daire form, was, as most connoisseurs will no doubt remember, a magnificent example, very far superior, both in quality and componstion, to Mr. Waring's picture; yet 6,400 guineas was at the time generally considered an excessive price to pay for it. Mr. Waring had purchased his 'Irogon from the artist himself some forty yars agn, and probably gave about fiso to E. 200 for it. It measured $37 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. by $50 \frac{1}{2}$ ins.; some sheep and cows, only one of which is in the foreground, are grazing under willows; a woman with a blue skirt stands in the background watehing over them. The picture is broadly painted, the coat of the brown and white cow in the foreground being especially fince. The landscape is somewhat heay and shut in. tar different from those extensive plains and transparent horizons which make the charm of so many works by this master.Mr. Waring did not show in all his purchases the same judgment and foresight which made him arquire his Frojon. Some other pietures no doubt showed a protit on the prices he had paid for them; for instance, a pair of pancls of flowers and fruit, by Fantin- Iatour, sold for 1 go guineas, and a fine watercolour by Sam kough, IÏnton //onse, East Lothion, for 280 guineas; on the other hand he possessed a certain number of works by artists much in rogue in the seventies, but now almost entirely neglected. Lomis XIMI. and "Lomis Quatorse," by" A. EImore, R.A., only reached 90 guineas; fortuies, by (i, 1). leslie, R.A., an important work, several times exhibited, realized the same price, whilst a large composition by P. I'. Poole, R.A., The Ercape of Gitucus and Ione reith the Bhind Girl Vivdia from Pomper, only found a purchaser at $3^{8}$ guineas

Among the pictures sold on the same day from the collection of the late J. 11. MeIaren, Esc!, there figured a very beautiful work by l . Wheatley, entitled The Market Gim, an officer in a red coat offering a purse of gold to a pretty peasant maden whom he has encountered in a country lane, and who coyly rejects his advances. The composition is graceful, and the colouring warmer than is often the case in the paintings of the author of The criss of London; it was knocked down at 530 guinens.

The only other picture worthy of attention at this sale was interesting rather from its subject and the personality of its author than from purely artistio merit. It was a nearly life-size portrait of Her Majesty Queen Victoria riding on a white charger in the grounds of Windsor Castle, by the famous Count dorsay, in whose career there has lately been a renewal of interest. The portrait was painted in I 846 , when the "dancly" was at the height whis motoricty ; it changed hands at ino guineas.

On the following Saturday, March ist, the hishest price was again reached by a picture of the firench school, A Flock of Sheep and Shepherd wherer a (lami of Thees, by Charles facque, who died a few cars ago, the last of the famous artists of Barbizor At first a lawger's clerk, then a soldier during $1!$ five jears that followed the Revolution of 1830 , : we produced until 1845 a large number of sted aras ings, etchings, and dry-points, and the book Nustrated by him both in fondon (among oth : an udition of .Shakespore, Picturesque Greece. id a Dance of Death) and in Paris, are now keenly ught by bibliophiles. it was only in 1845 that he gan to paint, and ten years later he was recogn: id as

"mann, Esq., was of good quality, the sh somewhat sombre and sunke: . it may be doubted whether it w. Id have fetched so much as ges suineas only a year or two ago. mong other pictures belonging to the various Continental schools in the same collection, there was a vety pleasing specimen of the Gicman painter, Ad. Schreyer, represcuting three Cossacks on horseback making their way through a snow-storm. There emanates from this picture an impression of desolation and bitter cold, the wind lifting and whirling round the horses' legs the scarcely fallen snow, which is in curious contrast with the same piinter's well-known Eastern scenes with Arab horsemen on the broiling sands of the desert. During the last few years the works of Schreyer have risen very considerably in value, so that 640 guineas scarcely seems an excessive price for this one
The best English picture in the collection was beyond a doubt the Purtrait of Lady Catherine Manners in the costume of a country girl, seated under a tree holding a basket of flowers, by Sir Martin Archer Shee, who succeeded Sir Thomas Lawrence in 1830 as president of the Royal Acalemy. This is a very excellent prortrait, strangely reminiscent of Hopponer, firm in drawing, and hot in colour, and well worth the 780 gumeas paid for it. 580 guineas were given for a Portrait of a Lady in rich grev dress with gold lace and lace sleeves, attributed, somewhat boldly we fear, to Sir Joshua Reynolds, bur more probably the work of Sir Joshua's master, Th imas Hudson. The Apple Gatherers, by Opie, wh h fetched 700 guineas, is an important but by o means pleasing example of this very unequal art i another collection, sold on the same day, we not ad a very fine landscape, Mitking Time, by loh linnell, sen. ( 440 guinens), and a Patrick $\mathrm{Na}_{\mathrm{a}}$. yth of fair quality, from the Gillott Collection, $A$ indy: Lane Sene ( 320 guineas).

SOID IN NEW YORK FOR $£ 4,000$

On February 15 th, the remaining works of the late John Brett, A.R.A. were disposed of at Christie's. The sale consisted of 120 oil-paintings of all siz's and in various stages of completion; about half a dozen pictures had been exhibited at the Royal Academy, at Manchester, and elsewhere, and these naturally fetched the highest prices. South Stack Lighthouse, dated 1896 , reached the top price, 145 guineas, and two other important canvases were sold for 105 guineas each, whilst smaller works ranged from 3 to 40 guineas. The total realised for the 120 lots was $£_{2,181} 7 \mathrm{~s}$. 6 d.

In the room; of Messers. Forter, Pall Mall, a few ime restins p.ectures appeared on March 5 th. Rachurn's fiofrail of John Comphitl when a child, sitting upon the tomb of his father and mother was the best work in the room. The pathetic figure of the boy in his long white dress and fowing hair, looking, in fact, for alt the world like a little girl, is painted in the Scotch master's broad and facile manner. Unfortunately, it has been badly treated, and shows signs of

Swerts, bette: known as an etcher than a ! inter, which was certainly not too dear at 180 guinea

On the Continent, sales of pictures have latel been of emall importance. In Paris, these function only start in real carncst about Easter time, and a ready we hear of some very important dispersals thue in Aprii and May. From New York, on the wher hand, we have received reports of several noterorthy auctions, and prices seem to be ruling high all round.

Historically, the most noteworthy painting of the sale was the remarkable Fortrait of Gerard Tcrburg by his brother-artist, Michael

So far it is curious to note the entire absence from the auction rooms in the United States of pictures of the Early English School, athough we know. .. our cost, that many masterpieces are constantly e:-..ing the Atlantic; old masters of the Dutch and 1 , lian schools have been fairly trequent and have con: "ted for the supremacy of price with works of the : mh painters of 1830 .

for i. At the same time no homogeneity of schi 1 or period seems to have been aimed at, and one was surprised to find 'litian's Portrait of Gii. io Cornaro side by side with Les Coulisses, a : mp of Ballerines in the wings of the Paris Op i House, by Degas. The Titian, which was forl :rly in the Earl of Carlisle's collection, fetched A.400: a beautiful and important Corot, a little too early to belong to the master's very best period, repissenting St. Sebastian (see illustration) reached E. 4.000 , or more than double its price at the Weotossés sale in l'aris three years ago. Among the Fromeh impressionists, Sortie du Port de Bonlosur, by C'laude Monet, sold for $£ \mathrm{f}, 410$, the same artist's Rome'l Cathedral for $£ 800$, and the work by Degas memioned above for $f 1,220$.

On the three last days of February, Messrs. Moussod, Valadon $&$ Co. held a sale in New York, at which large prices were realized by pictures of the French and Modern Dutch schools. The highest price paid, namely $£ 2,500$, was for Automedon and the horses of Achilles, painted by Henri Regnault in Italy during his sojourn there after he carried off the Prix de Rome. It will be remembered that this artist, who promised to take his place among the foremost pictorial geniuses of the nineteenth century, was mowed down at the age of twenty-seven in lanuary, 87 F , in the heroic sortic of Buzanval a few days before the capitulation of Paris to the Germans. It is impossible to surmise what he would bave arromplished had he been spared by the Prussian bullets; the pictures which he had time to complete siow the power of a I elacroix, the nervous vigour of Barye's bronzes, combined with the spontaneity of Velasquez and Goya. The death of Henri Regnault was not the least disaster which the ambition of Napoleon III. and the machiavellism of Bismarck brought upon France. Other canvases keenly competed for were La Ferté, by Corot ( $£ 2,300$ ), A Rierer Siene by Théodore Rousseau ( $£ 1,900$ ), Cottage Intirior by Joseph Israëls ( $£ 1,600$ ).
" Quantity, not quality," is the aptest comment on the huge collection of engravings of all kinds Prists formed during the early part of the nineteenth ceutury by Henry B. H. Beaufoy Esq., and sold at Christie's on February loth ane four following days. The prints were divided int. 865 lots; but a very small minority comprised onl a single engraving, whilst one hundred and more ("t) in several cases offered as one lot; the total mut ser of individual prints must therefore have ath. Anted to several thousands. Yet the total sum rea. de was only $£ 4,7288$ s. Remove a few fine impressions, such as Aliss Cumberiand, second state after Romney by J. K. Smith, which reached 128 guineas, and The Comuctte at her Toilette, a colour-print after Morland by W. Ward, 120 guineas, and The Marchioness Canden, colour-print by Schiavonetti after Sir J. Reyonolds, 80 guintas, and a few more sold for $\mathcal{X} .50$ or thereabouts, and all the rest may be commercially designated as "rubbish," and clismissed as such.

As a striking contrast, some really valuable prints were dispused of in the same rooms on February ioth. First and foremost, there was the famous mefootint, The Duchess of Rutlend, by Valentine (ireen after Sir Joshua Reynolds, a fine proof in the first state with wide margin. Some disappointment was felt that it failed by as much as 400 guineas to reach the price of a print in every way similar sold in the Blyth Collection last year for 1,000 guineas. It was reported after the sale that this particular impression was lately picked up in a country curio shop for fifteen shillings by a very wealthy man, who at the time was himself entirely unaware of the value of his find. Among other high prices we may note The Combess of Salishom, lirst state, by V. Green after Sir Joshua, 500 guincas, an increase of 50 guineas on Mr. Blyth's copy, and The Ladies Wialderrace, first state, same painter and engraver, 340 guineats (Hlyth sale price, 500 guineas). A complete series of the thirteen Cries of Lamdon, after F. Wheatley, by Schiavonetti, Vendramini, Cardon, and (iaugain, fetched 430 guineas. The prints were not all equally brilliant impressions, nor were they all in the same state of prescrvation, which probably points to a made up set, and accounts for the comparatively low price.

A few of the oft-recurrent Morland pairs were in evidence at the sale of colour-prints on March $f$ th. St. /ames's J'ark and A Tea-Carden, by F. I). Soiron, are certanly among the prettiest; but these not being more than ordinary impressions, only fetched 90 guineas. There were also some colour-prints after Sir Joshua and Hoppner, and the latter's Lad. Lomisa Manners, by C'. 'lumer, was sold for ${ }^{\text {I }} 35$ guineas.

A goob example of the immense difference that exists between one copy of a book that is in its Books pristine condition, so far as binding is Books concerned, and another that has been rebound, and in all probability cut down in the process, is afforded by Charles Lamb's Essals of Elia and the Last Essars, which Messrs. Puttick \& Simpson sold on the $3^{\text {rd }}$ of February. The original edition of the Essals, after appearing in the columns of the L.e:don Marasime, was published by T:yylor \& Hessey in 1823, in the usual cardboard covers of that day, white the Last Essegts was issued by the publisher, Moxon, ten yaus later, also in boards. The two copies sold at l'uttick's were "as issued," and they brought $£ 30$ and $£ 23$ respectively. Had they been rebound in the ustal ruinous half calf and cut down they might not have realised $£ 33^{\text {s. }}$ the phir, and would certainly not have brought 6.5 .

Twelve months previously, Messrs. Sotheby had sold fine copies of these two looks, each of them bound by Riviere, who, as might have been expected from such a master of the craft, had taken care not to smooth the edges except at the top, which were heavily gilt and burnished. The cost of rebinding must have been very considerable; the books certainly looked regal, and were a vast improvement, from an artistic point of view, upon boards. Yet they realised no more than $£ 195 \mathrm{~s}$. Should anyone wish to study the (ffect of rebinding upon what may conveniently be called " collector's books," he cannot do better than refer to the report of the sale of Mr. Frederick Burgess's library, which was held in May and June. 1894. Mr. Burgess had a very fine collection of fashionable works by Dickens, Thackeray, Ainsworth, and the rest, all of which he had had relound in splendid style, with edges uncut and covers bound up. The result was disastrous; the loss on the original cost very great, to say nothing of the expense of binding.

So the rule wags; the rule which lays it down that the painting of lilics is barbaric, a process not to be thought of by persons of taste and refinement. It is curious to note how it works out in practice, though the result itself is assured, and excites no curiosity. Far more speculative is the ultimate fate of books that owe their importance and reputation, or much of it, to the excitement of the moment. J huring February a copy of Sir Gcorge Nayler's Coromation of Georye LI', published by Bohn in 5839 , realised $£ 22$. This is a line book, it is true, full of accurately coloured plates of costumes of peers and others who took part in the ceremony, but the price is a record one. The Coronation is in the air, and that no doult accounts for much. In $1891 £^{2}{ }^{14}$ s. was realised, and in $1894, £ 57 \mathrm{~s}$. Gd. and $£^{2} 18 \mathrm{~s}$. respectively. These are the only other prices availathle, and though it cannot be said that all these copies were equally good, the one that sold for $£ 5$ odd in 1894 was, if anything, better than that which realised $\mathcal{L} 22$ in February last.

Another instance of a very similar kind occurred in 1897. Mr. R. R. Holmes's Queen Victoria jught to have been pulbished on the Queen's birtinday, May $2 \neq t h$, but was delayed in order that a suecial chapter descriptive of the Jubilee Commemeration might be added. That seems to have been the case, but whatever the reason, it was found expedient to delay the book. Excitement was running hish at the time, and the publishers' orders for delivery were being sold in licu of the book itself. In this way prospective copics of the Edition de Luve, ti) he published at $£ 8$, changed hands at nearly $£ 20$ apiece, and we do not say they wer not worth it under all the circumstances of the cass:, especially as a better Royal Biography was never written. But the echo of the Jubilee rejoicings died away at last, and as the excitement subsided, so in the same degree the work deteriorated in value.
Thus books rise and fall in the market, and are dependent upon circumstances which perhaps more often than not are altogether extraneous. On lecbruary 1 gth the series of engravings from the works of Sir Thomas Lawrence, published by Henry (iraves & Co., without date, made £ 100 at Sotheby's. The impressions were brilliant, but the price was high, very much higher than it would have been four or five years ago. This work is primarily a book, not a collection of prints, yet the fact of good single prints after the works of Sir Thomas Lawrence having risen rapidly in value of late, had its effect. Just now Art, as represented by pictures and prints, is in the ascendant, and that is the reason, or at any rate one reason, why finely illustrated hooks and books with coloured plates are in such great request.

Perlaps it would not be too much to say that the month of lebruary was, so far as the sale of lwoks by auction is concerned, the very worst that has occurred for fifteen yars. Not only were the sales few in number, but the books themselves, taken in the mass, proved to be of very inferior quaity. Works on Natural History occupy the formost place, and some of them may be briefly referrid to as showing the estimation in which good burs of this class are held. Curtis's British Entomelos' old twice, on February 3 rd, and again on the $1 g^{t}$ of of the same month. Each set of 16 volume was bound in 8 , and realised $£ 15$ and $£ 13$ resper ely, in a half calf binding. Cooke's British Fingi, 8 Ns., inclusive of the supplement, 1881-9t, realise : 53 (half morocco, uncut) ; Seemann's Journal of / and, from the commencement in 1863 to 190 , 3 , as. , $\mathscr{L} 14$ 5s. The most important work of this class which made it: appearance was undoubtedly Iovell Reeve's Cunchologria Iconica, $1845 \cdot 78$, 4to. This splendid sutes of 20 vols, containing 2,727 coloured plates, sol: for $£ 80$ (half morocco), as against $\mathscr{E} 84$ in October, 1gor (ibid.). Reichenbach's Icones Flore (Gimamica, $1850-99,23$ vols. 4 to, brought $\mathscr{E}_{3} 3$ (the first 21 vols. in 15 , half morocco, remainder in parts), and Schimper's Bryologia Europiea, the 6 vols., containing 640 plates, $£^{15}$ ios. (half morocco). Closely allied to works of the kind, though not of them, are The Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Sicioce, 186i-97, new series, vols. 1 to 39, $£ 42$ ( 14 vols. half bound, the remainder in numbers), and by a stretch of imagination-a very long stretch some people may think-The Alpine Ched /ournal, $1864-93$, vols. 1 to 16 (vol. 12 missing), and the index to the first $: 5$ vols., $£ 24$ ios. Another and slightly longer series of 20 volumes had brought $£ 29$ ros. on the last day of January.

Standard works of English Literature were conspicuous by their almost total absence. A copy of the first edition of Milton's Paradise Lost, 1669 : described as the " 5 th or 6 th issue," brought $\mathcal{E} 14$ ios. (original sheepskin), and a copy of the Paradise Regained, also the first edition, $167 \mathrm{I}, \mathrm{E} 14$ (old calf). Why the Paradise Lost should have been described as belonging to the " 5 th or 6th issue" is not clear. The two issues are quite distinct and easily recognisable, for, to say nothing of the date, the fifth has three stars, thus $:^{*} *$, before and after the author's name on the title, while the sixth has none. This may seem to be a very trifling variation, but is not so in reality. It makes all the difterence in the commercial value, so finely drawn have distinctions now become. So far as the Jaradise Lost is concerned, the rule is, the earlier the issue the greater the value. The copy sold was really one of the seventh issue of the first edition, though it might have betonged to the eighth or nimth.

Whenever an author of the present day chances to think of Milton's immortal classic, of its early ricissitudes and the profit, in money, that was reaped by its publication, the thought should nerve hin: to take courage, and, like St. l'aul, "go onward." The fact is that the epic did not sell, and the pul isher, to save himself, kept binding up a few cops at a time, altering the title page on each occition to suit the year and the circumstance. The first cdition was only exhausted after nine attempts at t : least, probably more, of this kind, and at least nine lifferent title pages are known to exist, and consequ ntly as many different issues of the original editi $n$. The first, which is the scarcest of all, has the title page with the author's name in large italic capitals and the date 1667 . In 1678 such a copy sold byauction for 3 s. at Manton's Sale, held at his private house in King Street, Covent Garden. By 1864 the price had risen to $£ 28$ ros. ; now it stands at about $\mathcal{E}^{120}$, ard should go higher still.

The miscellaneous sale held by Mr. Dowell at Edinburgh on the last days of February was, like all the other sales held during the month, of very little importance from a monetary point of view. A number of law books, belonging to the late Mr. Campbell, Advocate and Sheriff of Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk, realised high prices, but books of this kind are of no interest save to the limited few whose business it is to consult them. A set of the Scottish History Society Publications, vols. I to $28,1887-98$, brought $£ 20$ 1os., and that curious work, Brathwaite's $A$ Stratpado for the Divell, iGi5, £435. 6d. As the copy was a fairly good one, it ought to have realised more. Boydell's History of the River Thames, 2 vols., 1794-96, sold for $£ 7$, as against $£ 13$ for another set sold at Sotheby's on January 3oth. In the latter case, however, a series of proof plates by Cooke had been added.

It is worth while remarking that at the present time books with coloured plates are rapidly increasing in value, and that in all probability they will have a lengthy run. They are distinctly the fashionable books of the day, and some of them cost as much again and more than they did a couple of years ago. No matter how grotesque or bizarre the plates may be, no matter how foolish and inane the letterpress that accompanies them, they have their admirers in plenty, nor would the question of expense appear to be very material. The boom reminds one of the palmy days of "Phiz," the Cruikshanks, Leech, Alken, and other talented artists whose illustrations made any book in which they were found. Even now very fine copies, illustrated by these masters, are in request, but the ordinary examples, once sought for and pri\%ed as better than nothing, have fallen upon evil days. Collectors will have the best or none.

Owing to the death of Professor A. von Sallet, Director of the Berlin Royal Cabinet of Coins, his valuable collection of antique objects came under the hammer recently at Lepke's Sale Rooms. The collection, which was the work of many years' study and research, comprised sculpture, bronzes of the Gothic and Renaissance periods, rare examples of the old Meissner porcelain, miniatures, Louis XVI. furniture, snuff-boxes, etc.

Although the prices at no time ran high, better prices were given for some of the lots than at previous sales held in Berlin recently. Amongst the English miniatures the portrait on ivory of lady Dover, with her child on her lap, was one of the best. Exquisitely painted and framed in gilded bronze, it went for $£ 18$ i5s. A pair of Meissner salt collars richly decorated with figures in colours and gold, were bought for $£ 26$, after keen competition; and a pair of Chetsea china candlesticks fetched $£ 21$. A most curious piece of old oak carving was the middle piece of a side wing of a Gothic high altar, carved in high relief. In the centre panel was the draped figure of the Blessed Virgin, with long hair flowing over the shoulders, and two groups on each side, taken from biblical subjects. It was an excellent specimen from the Netherlands, but it fetched only $\mathscr{E}_{1} 7$ ios.

Great interest was shown in a Louis XV. scent bottle, in blue crystal glass, ornamented with gold. On one side was a clock and on the other a compass, the foot forming a little box ; the stopper of garnet, in the shape of a rosette. The bidding rose rapidly and without hesitation, until it finally stopped at $£ 57$.

A pair of large Louis XVI. gilt bronze vases on white marble socles, decorited with acanthus leaves in high relief, very fine specimens, 30 ins. hish, fetehed 650 . Somewhat curious were a pair of Louis XVI. candelabra, in the form of white marlle vases, with chased gilt mountings, the handles in the shape of serpents. Out of the vases spring rose branches, which form the candle holders. They sold for $£+4$.

The low price of $£ 39$ ros. was paid for a small Renaissance walnut wood chest, the front divided into three sections by richly carved pilisters. In these panels family arms and monograms were carced in high relief, and in the side panels lion's hods. The chest had four carved feet. The next lot werthy of notice was a small Louis XV. chest of dra iers, with bulging carved front, inlaid with trailing fly ers, which was knocked down for $£ 29$. Only $£: 5$ was given for the St. Margaret (illustrated on page 2? : by Tylmann Ricmenschncider (Wuraburg), $1+60$ : $3^{1 /}$ The figure, which is 42 ins. high, and rese iles that of St. Dorothea in the Maria Chapel, in :irt burg, is characteristic of the great carver.
tal e centre-piece, in the form of a salver, with pieieed border. In the middle is a round pedestal, on which stands the figure of a woman, holding with bo:h hands a pierced basket, and round the salver are small vases and receptacles. The next curiosity wis a small ( $10 \frac{1}{2}$ ins. high) old Meissner ornament, a itting swan. It was a very fine specimen, but a slipht crack in the neck of the swan depreciated the valuc, and it was knocked down for $£ 35$. A Surmberg gilt goblet of the sixteenth century, of cylindrical form, with embossed lid, and on which is a stittuette of a warrior, marked with the monogram of Jeronymus Behain, Nurnberg, 1593 , sold for $£ 27$. The ridiculously low sum of $£ 305 \mathrm{~s}$. was given for a well preserved gobelin of the sisteenth contury (iliustrated on page 282), representing a distinguished bridal pair, in the contre of a landscape, Over the figures is the motto, "Liche mich alls ich Dich, nicht mehr begere ich" (I ove me as I love you; more I do not desire), 1587 . The colours were very fresh, and it was alogether a fine example.

An interesting curiosity was a (ienealogical Register of the beginning of the seventeenth century, containing thirty-three pages of fine water-colour portraits of princes and court celebrities, ecclesiastics, nobles, and commoners. Particularly interesting are those of the royal couple, Henry IV. and Marje of Medici, recciving a Knight of the Order of the Holy Ghost. The book also contains illustrations of numerous religious and allegorical subjects. It is bound in stamped leather. The price paid for it was only $£_{2}=1$. The only other lots which were of particular interest were an agate snuff-box, mounted in gold and finely chased, opening at two ends, which sold for E.28; and an old Meissner dish with five medallions in fold cireles, and otherwise richly decorated with flowers and insects, which fetched $£ 25$ 5s.

The sale of the Hayashi collection of Japanese wriks of art, which took place in Paris at the rooms of Messrs. Ihurand Ruel, under the

Hayashi

Sale auspices of M. Bing, and which lasted from the 27 th January to the ist February, ha: broken up one of the finest assemblages of Jajunese curios ever brought together in Europe, the only collection which competed with it either for the number or quality of examples being that wh h is under review in our current issue. $M$. $H_{i}$ ashi had the most unique opportunities for colscting the art work of his native country, with a vie to appealing especially to European tastes, and he ertainly made the most of them. He belonged to that class of individuals, far more common in Saris than london, who can appropriately be styled collector-dealers, and whenever he secured any particularly fine specimen, either of metal work, painting, lacquer, or carving in ivory or wood, he religiously put it aside for his own delectation, and no offer could tempt him to part with it. At the Paris Exhibition of 1900 the bulk of his collection was on view by private admission: but any respectable individual presenting his card at the office of the Japanese Art Commission, of which he was the head, readily received the required permission. Circumstances recently arose which decided Monsicur Hayashi to dispose of his entire collection $e n$ Woc, and the result of the sale must have been gratifying both to the pocket and the amour propere of the owner. It is more than doubtful whether the total price of just under half a million francs which the six days' sale produced would have been equalled in this country, where Japanese art is not appreciated, except by a few connoisseurs, to anything like the same extent as in Paris, where art lovers are much less influenced by the strangling dictates of fashion.

The sale opened with the carved wood figures, ranging in date from the eighth to the sixteenth centuriss, some of them being decorated in polychrome, and atl of them of the greatest dignity and treauty. The highest price for any one figure was E324, which was paid for a seated Bochisatwa in painted wood of the ninth century, the period of Tempio. The figure and stand together are about 2 ft .6 ins . high, and the composition leaves nothing to te desired. The figure of Bichamon vanquishing a demon, in wood, painted and gilt, by Oumke, dating from the latter end of the twelfth century, a splendid specimen of polychrome decoration, as well as a most majestic piece of carving, made $£ 204$, and five or six other figures from $£ \mathrm{r} 20$ to $£ 170$ apicce.

Among the carved wood masks, an eighth century one of a man, painted red, but covered almost entirely with a blackish patina, fetched $£ 38$; another one of the same period making $£ 36$.

The lacquer work, which came next in order, comprised 190 lots, and fetched very good prices all round, the best being $£ 204$ for a very early hexagonal hox of gold-speckled lacquer, edged with pewter. The box came from the Palace of the Shogun Yoshimassa, the Japanese Mrecenas of the fifteenth century, to whom Japanese art owes so much; while a tin box, decorated with field flowers, made $£$ roo, and $£ 124$ was paid for an inkstand, the motif of whose decoration was the reflection of moonbeams on the water.

A pair of cabinet doors made the top price, fetching $£ 320$. The average price of each lot was about $E 4^{\circ}$.

The highest price for any one bronze was $£ 284$, which was paid for a vase of primitive Chinese work long before the commencement of the Christian era. The vase, which is called Ko, is spherical in shape, and was originally entirely gilt, which, however, has been much destroyed by oxydization. Another vase made $£ .56$, and another $£ 204$, while three more fetched $£ 124$ apiece.
$£ 200$ was paid for a fine thirteenth century bronze figure of Amida, originally entirely gilt, but now only on the face, with traces on the chest and hands, the projecting parts being covered with a fine green patina. A statuette of gilt Thibetan bronze made $£ 2416 \mathrm{~s}$., and a unique model of a falcon, the pupils of whose eyes are shakado and the iris gold, made $£ 40$. This bird was the trial proof of one of the celebrated set of falcons executed about the sixteenth century by Chokichi Suzuki, and representing twelve different varieties of the birds which composed the falconry of the old Shoguns.

The collection of tsubas and sword-hilt ornaments was perhaps the most perfect and exhaustive which could possibly have been made, and the prices were correspondingly high, the average for the entire collection being about $£ 2$ apicce, and in lany individual cases very large figures were rea hed. The tsubtias, which dated from the ninth the eighteenth centuries, formed a perfect chronol, gical collection down to the deposition of the L haimio: and the abolition of feudalism in Japan, when it was made illegal to carry swords, and consequently all the decorations with which they had been enrished became so many curios, and as such were colleted.

Of the paintings, the pair of six-leaved screens, by Sesson Shukei, an artist of the Chinese school, representing a desolate and mountainous winter scene, in Chinese ink, with high lights in the and light brown, made $£ 620$, and a fourteenth century Kakemono on silk, by Naitscho, representing a Bodhisatwa, $£ 396$. Several other important paintings futched $£ 80$ to $£ 140$ apiece.

An interesting Korean crackle pot, in imitation of sharkskin, seventeenth century, fetched $£ 24$ ifs., and a good specimen of Satsuma pottery, in the form of a scent burner, $£ 28$ r6s.

The books and documents belonging to Monsicur Hayashi will be sold at a later period of the year.

On the 7 th of last month Messrs. Christie sold a set of four ivory figures, nearly 23 ins. high, representing the seasons, and of exceptionally Works of Art fine workmanship, for $£ 294$, while at the same rooms on the 28 th a pair of old Frencl, gilt bronze classical groups of Hercules slaying the Nemean Lion, and Milo rending the Oak, made £131 $5^{\text {s., though their antiquity was distinctly }}$ questionable. At the same sale $\mathscr{E} 120$ iss. was paid for a pair of most unusual shagreen bowls, $9 \frac{t}{\frac{t}{2}}$ ins. in diameter, and beautifully mounted inside and out with bands chased with bulrushes and foliage, with figures of lizards, shell-fish, frogs and birds, all in fine old contemporary French silver, and with fine silver mounts in the base. These bowls were most uncommon, presumably of the early Louis XV. period, and in every way worthy of the high price realized. At Messrs. Foster's a I.imuges bronze reliquary, with Champléve enamel decorations, in the form of a saint holding his had in his hands which rested on his knee, nude the speculative price of $£ 27$. The picce, which was described as sixteenth century, was in any case well worth the price paid, and if it was ger: ine fourtcenth century, five times that amount. It Christie's, on the 25 th, an oval gold snuff. as, enamelled with a fine portrait of a lady of the (:rt of Louis XVI., and chased round the edges ith trophies in gold of three colours, made $£ 152 ;$ s.. and a miniature of Lord Robert Fitggerald, sc.. of the iest Duke of Leinster, with powdered hair, in a are II coat and white cravat, by Englehart, fetched f189, while a number of other miniatures in the same sale made good prices. On the 18 th the same firm sold for $£ 194$ 5s. a white marble bust, 7 ins. high, of Mme. de Pompadour, with roses in her hair and loose drapery failing over her shoulders. The bust was mounted on a fine Severes porcelain pedestal, decorated with gilt trophics on a turguoise blue ground.

Messrs. Debenham & Storr sold on the 28th two more Chinese Imperial seals, both in jade, for $£ 200$ the pair. One was the private seal of the Empress fowager, and used by her for sealing paintings which she herself had executed, and the other also used by the Empress for stamping visiting cards.

The prices realised for early English furniture, both in important and minor sales, during the part

Furniture

 month reveal a supply quite inadequate to the demand, and a consequent inflation of prices even for inferior articles; indeed, at a sale held by Messrs. Christic towards the end of the month, of a collection, which was principally composed of specimens frankly modern, and of a quality which happily rarely finds an entrance to the great King Street rooms, the prices obtained were such, that unless the articles had been viewed previously, anyone reading the marked cataloguc would have imagined that the purchasers in many eases had secured genuine furniture of a second-rate quality at distinctly bargain prices, instead of modern copies at considerably over the prices at which they could have been purchased at any respectable shop. The prices both of pre and post Chippendale furniture are constantly rising, and good specimens of nineteenth century work of the carly Gillow style are now rajidly coming into notice. On the other hand, the Carolian and Jacobean periods are daily increasing in value, and even now would appear to the good for a bige rise, though the best pieces always ereate the keenest competition among the real comoisseurs, whether professional or amateur, whenever they come up at public auction. A pair of large Charles II. arm-chairs, finely carved and up anlstered in old Italian veliet and gold brocade mede $£ 78$ ifs. at Christie's on the 7 th, and a rel arkably fine Charles II. oak couch, with original call: panels in almost perfect condition, fetched £. 515 s . on the 28 th in the same sale as the pair of, 000 guinea Chippendale chairs.Whe sale of the effects of Mr. Blyth on the rith res lted in some high prices for Chippendale and She:aton furniture, a pair of semi-circular folding card tables of satinwood decorated with flowers, and with arabespue centres, on white and gold fluted legs, making $£ 1$ ra ros., and an almost similar pair fro7 2s., while a Chippendale mahogany side table, with gadroon border, the front carved with flowers and foliage in festoon, and on carved legs with claw feet, made $\mathrm{f}_{\mathrm{t}} 26$; and a set of sixteen chairs and two arms, on cabriole legs with ball and claw feet, made $£ 19+5$ s., or rather over $£$ ro a chair, which was a distinctly reasonable price, considering the length of the set and the quality of the chairs. A fine arm-chair, also in Chippendale style, on cabriole legs, and ornamented with wheat cars and husks, made $\mathscr{E} .59$ i8s., and a winged arm-chair $£^{26} 55$.

The price of $£ \mathrm{r}, 050$ paid at Christic's on the 28 th for a pair of most remarkable Chippendale armchairs was, of course, absolutely fictitious, although the chairs in question, so far as possible, justified the extravagance of the figure. The price at which they had treen generally estimated before the sale was from $£ 200$ to $£ 400$, the latter being an outside hatard; and the fact that thes made practically three times their fair value was due to their being wanted to complete a set owned by a well-known collector, also indirectly to a ducl between two of the leading fine art dealers, who in all probability knew of the defective set in guestion. The chairs were distinctly Chippendale, though with French lugs, and loaring strong traces of the Queen Anne style, and were certainly a most wonderful and unique pair. At the same sale $£ 493$ los. was paid for a very elegant suite of Lomis XIV. furniture in dull satinwood, and with backs and seats upholstered in contemporary French tapestry, consisting of a stag hunt on the seat of the sof:a, and a Boucher subject of children, cupid, and trophies on the back, while the six fauteuils were covered in similar tapestry, worked with bouquets of flowers on a buff ground ; and a pair of semi-circular satinwood cabinets, inlaid with oval panels painted with groups of flowers, and mounted with masks and borders of chased ormolu, made $£ .378$; and a wery uncommon linglish folding card-table of late Jacobean period, the borders covered with embossed leather in arabespuce design, and the top covered with an old pancl of petit point needlework with playing cards and counters, and fruit and foliage, made$27 \frac{1}{2}$ guincas-a by no means out-of-the-way price for a practically matchless piece of furniture. A William and Mary gate table on eight legs went for $16 \frac{1}{2}$ guineas.

UNIQUE EXAMPLES of OLD CHURCH FURNITURE at HAMPTON'S.  "In the ordinary course of things it is seldom one comes across such interesting pieces of furniture as those depicted here. These

 pices, which have only recently come into the possession of Messrs. Hampton & Sons, Pall Mall East, are far removed from the dinary. The old confessional, probably French, is a very fine piece of work of its period (late ifth or early i8th century). It is made of oak, and the gratings, through which the voice of the penitent comes to the ear of the priest, are formed by pierced and carved ornament in the upper panels. Quite unique, I fancy, is the ecclesiastical shrine, of exceedingly elaborate design and most skilful workmanship. The centre of the upper part revolves on a pivot and consists of a convex oaken door carved with Christian emblems, and two bro-cade-lined niches as shown in smaller detached sketch above. The mouldings and details on every part are wonderfully well executed, and, although covered with carving, this fine piece of old church furniture is so well designed that no fussiness is apparent. The two old West Country scoring boards were probably in use in Charles II.'s time, the date 1666 being carved at the top of one of them, whilst above that are three small birds which probably symbolised the sign adopted by the good innkeeper of Bristol for his hostelry. In the midale of the panel is the figure of Hope, and more birds occur amongst the foliage. The board on the ghthas several figures, Hope, Justice, Charity, Concord, and Faith. It is supposed that these boards were used for chalking up the vints of customers, the plain side, of course, receiving the figures, which were then turned to the wall, leaving the carved front to face mot the room. To all those who love the curious, and have a leaning towards the collecting of genuine specimens of old furniture, Lese and many other of Messrs. Hampton's latest acquisitions will prove of exceptional interest."-Gentlewoman, gth November, yor

Full particulars of the dimensions, price, etc., of these and a variety of other interesting examples of old Ecclesiastical Cabinets now on sale in Hampton's Galleries for Antiques may be fad on application.

THE ADVICE OF ALL MEDICAL CELEBRITIES

Natural

 Aperient Water(Source-Llorach).

IS that the natural purgatives constitute a most certain preservative and a most efficient remedy against INFLUENZA, and on such an occasion the use of the Natural Mineral Purgative Water RUBINAT (Source-Llorach) cannot be too strongly recommended.
It should be drunk in the morning before taking food, and a dose of one glass will produce a certain and prompt effect without causing any irritation or drastic effects of other purgative waters, which depend for their action on magnesium salts.

T'HE accompanying three illus. trations show the interior walls of a complete room measuring 17 feet by II feet 6 inches height 16 feet 6 inches, beautifully designed and decorated with choice Paintings on Panels and Wood Carving. The Carving is entirely executed in Walnut, the whole of which in. cludes nearly forty subjects of great merit.

The work is a splendid example of Modern Italian Art, and is in perfect state. It is most admirably suited for an Anteroom in a modern mansion.

Mutual Life Assurance with Moderate Premiums.

T"HE Premiums do not as a rule exceed the non-profit rates of other Offices; nevertheless they secure right to participation in the Whole Surplus on a system peculiarly favourable to good lives.
CIXTY-FIVE per cent. of the Policies which became claims by death during 1900 were entitled to Bonuses which, notwithstanding the lowness of the Premiums, were, on the average, equal to an addition of considerably over 50 per cent. to the Original Assurances.

Built by HENRT VIII. for ANNE BOLEYX
Apart from historical interest and intrinsic beauty these Gates have the special merit of being . . . . THE EARLIEST EXAMPLE OF IRON GATEWAYS IN ENGLAND.

THESE Gates, as they exist at the present time, are in remarkably good condition and complete, with the exception that the ornamental designs which formerly surmounted the pediments have been entirely removed. The design added and shewn in above illustration is therefore only intended as suggestion of what might be easily and appropriately restored.
E. P. HARMAN, during many years of persistent effort, has been privileged to acquire some of the finest specimens of Iron and Stone Work in the kingdom, and so keenly are they now sought after that such examples as the one now offered will, in future, be practically unobtainable. These gates may be seen in a town at any time.

"THE CONNOISSEUR"

Consists of 60 pages (exclusive of Advertisements), containing SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES on ART TOPICS of every description by the best known Experts.

THE field in which the Collector is interested is a most fascinating one, but hitherto has not been represented by an independent magazine.
"The Connoisseur" supplies this want, and is the only Magazine of its kind.
It has been founded with exceptional care; it will give invaluable information unobtainable elsewhere, and its numbers when bound will form a standard book of reference.

Every subject with which "The Connoisseur" can rightly deal, interesting to the man or woman of taste, will be written upon and illustrated by the leading authorities of the day.

The artistic features of the paper will be of a high order, and will include a Monthly Portrait of some one of celebrity as a Collector, and a Presentation Plate.

All communications should be addressed to the Offices of "The Connoisseur," 37, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Clock and Candelabra, height 3 ft . This set is considered to be the finest specimen of metal work in existence; it is Ormolu git with ebony and ormolu pillars, and is a perfect type of the Louts XiII. period. The detail of the carving is as fine as any Goldsmith's production, every part is in relief, and the figures are the most exquisitely finished models that can be imagined. The movement is also very fine, and the gong on which the quarters and hours are struck is a deep Cathedral tone. The alove can be seen by appointment in London.

RARE FURNITURE.  and METAL WORK.

Genuine Antique Furniture and Metal Work require cleaning. It is absolutely essential that this should be done with reverent care. No aids to cleanliness and beauty should be used which are likely to scratch or otherwise injure articles of vertu. The "Globe" Metal and Furniture Polishes are now used all over the World, because experience has shown that they are the best in their respective spheres of utility, and do not injure or otherwise destroy the most delicate work to which they are applied.

> They contain nothing injurious to the skin, nor will they otherwise injure the finest metal work or most delicate piece of furniture.
> Globe Polishes (Metal and Furniture) are sold everywhere; but should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining them, please write to Raimes & Co., Limited, Tredegar Road, Bow, London, E., or Stockion-on-Tees.

Consists of 60 pages (exclusive of Advertisements), containing SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES on ART TOPICS of every description by the best known Experts.

THE field in which the Collector is interested is a most fascinating one, but hitherto has not been represented by an independent magazine.
"The Connoisseur" supplies this want, and is the only Magazine of its kind.
It has been founded with exceptional care; it will give invaluable information unobtainable elsewhere, and its numbers when bound will form a standard book of reference.

Every subject with which "The Connoisseur" can rightly deal, interesting to the man or woman of taste, will be written upon and illustrated by the leading authorities of the day.

The artistic features of the paper will be of a high order, and will include a Monthly Portrait of some one of celebrity as a Collector, and a Presentation Plate.

AU communications should be addressed to the Offices of "The Connoisseur," 37, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

It is a trite saying that "the world knows nothing of its greatest men." With equal truth it may be said that the world knows very little about the history of the great business firms which are the backbone of our nation's commercial importance. What, for instance, does the casual wayfarer know about the history of Gillow's? He knows, it may be, that it is an old-established firm, that its name is a synonym for the highest quality of furniture, and that its London premises are situated in Oxford Street. Practically he knows nothing more. He is ignorant of its age, of its remarkable growth and career, of its unique record, of the important part which it still plays, even of the magnificent collection of all styles of furniture which is on view to those who care to visit its Galleries at 404.412 , Oxford Street.
Yet Gillow's has been a name of distinction in the world of artistic manufacture during six generations. It may be said, with the strictest truth, to be the oldest furnishing house in the world. Its origin dates back to the close of the seventeenth century. It has flourished in the reigns of William III., Anne, the Georges, William IV., Victoria, and Edward VII., and instead of exhibiting any signs of decay it has quite recently thrown itself with vigour into the arena of modern enterprise, extended its premises, enlarged its famous galleries, and greatly widened the already large scope of its operations. Founded in or about the year 1695 , in Lancaster, it rapidly grew from small beginnings into an important manufacturing and export house, doing a big trade in furniture with the West Indies, and receiving sugar and rum in exchange. Owing to the increasing fame of the Lancaster Gillow's, a London branch was established soon after the middle of the eighteenth century, and from that time to the present it has held the very foremost position for the design and construction of the best quality of cabinet work and for the decorative treatment of houses.

extracts from its old day-books and records, has been recently published. It traces the growth of the business through the greater part of two centuries, shows what enterprising men the early Gillows were and how they throve, and brings into strong relief the remarkable continuity and permanence of the name, in spite of changes of fashion and the stress of modern competition. A business two centuries old is something of a phenomenon; a business two centuries old that is still in the active vigour of youth is more than a phenomenon. Surely, there must be an elixir vila, and surely the people who control Gillow's must have drunk deep thereof! An argument in sup port of this theory is afforded in the develop ments, both structural and artistic, which have recently taken place in the Oxford Street premises of the firm. These important alterations included the taking in of an adjacent site and adapting the additional accommodation to the requirements of the growing trade. The noble inner hall has been developed into a magnificent foyer, from which the grand old staircase rises to the upper galleries and the interesting series of fitted rooms. No one who has not visited this establishment can form an idea of its extent, of the immense superficial area which its floors cover, of the wealth of beautiful material which is on view, or of the educational and technical value of the departments for the display of different styles of furniture.

of the treasures which Gillow's have on view illus. trating the historical periods of English and Continental art. A finer or more impressive collection of reproductions of antique furniture, characterised by brilliant workmanship, it would be impossible to find outside a public art gallery or museum. Every style is adequately reproduced. The examples of buhl, marquetry, and French gilt furniture, of Italian carved work, of eighteenth century English inlays by Sheraton and others, of the finest hand-painted satin wood, of costly and unique brocades-the productions of the great days of French art-are superb. No other house in the world can compete with Gillow's in the splendour of its galleries, and the contents, whether the furniture be gilt or of oak, or inlaid mahogany, or satin wood relieved with other woods of delicate colours and fine texture, are invariably marked with the distinction of conscien. tious and artistic work. It is no exaggeration to describe these galleries as an object-lesson in historical decorative art. In their way, they are as instructive and educational as the collections of furniture in the principal museums, for they illustrate not only the best periods of art, but the most conscientious and loving efforts of craftsmanship.
It is interesting to see here examples of the work of the Brothers Adam, of Chippendale, of Heppelwhite, and of Sheraton, made from their own designs far back in the eighteenth century; of chairs that have stood the test of more than a hundred years' wear, and are still sound and serviceable; of the refined and graceful forms which our forefathers, antiquary and the artist. In its main features it is studied from the famous old English mansion at Knole, in Kent, and is intended to typify the hall of a sixteenth century manorhouse. The architectural knowledge, the enthusiastic regard for the feeling of the Elizabethan or Jacobean style, and the controlling taste which were requisite conditions of success in this reproduction, are all found in the scholarly and thoughtful details. Gillow's, fortunately for the credit of English decorative art, possess a studio of designers who are masters of the various styles, but of none more than of that chosen by the architect of the Elizabethan manor-house. They knew where to go for the best examples, they had at their fingers' ends the best methods of treatment, they were filled with a spirit of enthusiasm for the art which prevailed in the "sparious times" of great Elizabeth. A nobler hall than this Long Gallery is not to be found even in those few what time George III. was King, affected in their household furniture; of the persistency with which these fine old types keep their hold upon the appreciation of a later day.

It is not, however, merely an arrangement of specimen pieces which distinguishes Gillow's galleries. The whole science of decoration is illustrated there. The unique series of fitted rooms and richly-decorated apartments forms an exhibition of the highest historical and artistic distinction. We supply in these pages several illustrations of the rooms referred to. The first to claim consideration, both by reason of its size and importance, is known as the Long Gallery, decorated in the Elizabethan style. The simple grandeur, the well-ordered richness, the obvious stability and substantiality of the decoration, and the old-world baronial atmosphere of the room, create a very impressive effect. This hall is an education alike to the examples of the Elizabethan manor-house which still exist. Knole, as already said, has been the inspiration. It is from Knole that the great chimney - piece, reaching to the ceiling, and composed of many different coloured marbles, is copied. The ceiling, with its ribwork panelling and floral ornament, is also taken from the same example, which represents the best period of English plaster work. The walls are covered, except for the low oak dado, with a reproduction of antique Genoese velvet in colours of rich red and deep old gold. The enscmble is, indeed, splendid. One seems to be in a veritable old English home, and to catch the spirit of the times. The pieces of furniture displayed here are in many cases veritable antiques, and the beautiful Oriental carpet adds to the magnificence of the general effect.

The chief features in the Jacobean Drawing Room are the elaboratelymodelled ceiling after a very fine geometrical pattern, and the handsome chimney-piece with fine ornamentation extending from floor to ceiling; and the high decorative value of the harmonised results can hardly be overpraised. The walls are treated with an oak dado, surmounted with rose-coloured coverings. A view is also given of the inner hall, which is panelled in oak, and contains, like the other apartments, some beautiful pieces of furniture and fine old works of art. The smaller fitted rooms consist of a Georgian Hall, a beautiful prominent features. A view is also given of a Child's Bedroom, fitted in pale green panelled wood-work, surmounted with a bold and quaint frieze. This room is quite in the modern style, but avoids the extravagance into which some of the Continental designers, in their frantic struggle to be original, allow themselves to drift.

bedroom in satin wood panelled up to the cornice in oak, and having a noble recessed chimney-piece and a fine buffet fitment; a Morning Room, a Jacobean Dining Room, panelled in oak, a Child's Bedroom in the Nouveau Art style, and one or two other apartments. Our illustrations include an interesting view of the Morning Room, which is panelled in white, and enriched with a very delightfu: Elizabethan plaster ceiling, and a bold frieze rather in the style of the "new art." The recessed chimney-piece, with its antique fire-dogs, quaint lanterns for the electric light, and dainty and elegant reproductions of eighteenth century furniture are they do, from the time of George III. to the beginning of the twentieth century, will be found to form practically an illustrated history of furniture. As the brochure already referred to informs us, it is most interesting and instructive to observe how the ever-changing styles passed from the beautifully-proportioned work of the eighteenth century, in its various phases of Chippendale, Sheraton, Heppelwhite, and the Brothers Adam, to the debased forms of the early Victorian period, when Art in England reached its point of greatest degeneracy. Then followed the Gothic revival, created by Pugin and Sir Chas. Barry; but this soon gave place to the Jacobean, which came with a rush into popular favour, and retained its hold for many years, thanks to the genius of Talbert, which Gillow's encouraged and fostered. More recently, Louis XIV., XV., and XVI. furniture has been much sought after, and Gillow's have reproduced some of the finest pieces in the Jones collection. They have also had exact copies made by French ibénistes of the most celebrated works in the palaces and museums of France. Moreover, owing to their relations with the great Paris decorative artists, Gillow's are in a specially favoured position with regard to supplying unique specimens of French furniture, of which their showrooms have contained for many years the finest collection to be seen out of Paris. Now once again the incomparable style of English furniture of the eighteenth century has taken hold of popular favour, and we are experiencing a revival which it is to be hoped may long last. Gillow's are still engaged in reproducing some of the best examples of Chippendale, Sheraton, Heppelwhite, and the Brothers

Adam, the particulars of which appear in their oll books. Their record, as the reader will agree, is a great one. It is not too much to say that at 1 critical time, when English Decorative Art and its handicrafts had fallen into a terribly debased state, Gillow's redeemed the character of the country by the consistently pure design and high quality of their work. They vigorously attacked decoration from the standpoint of artists and experts ; sent their agents all over the world to secure fine examples it silks and velvets from Portugal, Spain, and Italy. and collected notable specimens of carved work of every period. Their showrooms, we must repeat, are to-day the finest in the world, containing a mag. nificent and unapproachable collection of every style of Decorative Art. With such a record and its vast resources, Gillow's is necessarily the most powerful and the most effective organization of its kind in existence.

Before concluding this sketch, it may be worth while to allude briefly to two or three interesting facts. The billiard table in its original form was the invention of the firm, and for many years they had a monopoly of the manufacture. A century and a quarter ago the billiard table was a very primitive affair compared with our highly finished article. The slate bed had not been introduced, and was not known till many years later; the cushions were stuffed with wool, the table was lighted by means of candlesticks made of wood, and the players played with " masts." In those days an ivory ball cost 2s., and superfine cloth was only one shilling and two pence per yard. Gillow's made the first "Davenport" to the order of a captain of that name. The telescopic dining table, which now finds a place in neatly every house, was the invention of Richard Gillow, who took out a patent for it in 1800, the specification describing it as "an improvement in the method of constructing dining and other tables, calculated to reduce the number of legs, pillars, and claws, and to facilitate and render easy their eniargement and reduction."

Gillow's have a large factory at Lancaster covering an area of 5,000 square yards, and in the adjoining show-rooms are to be seen fac-similes of cabinets made for many of the crowned heads of Europe. They have carried off a large number of medals and diplomas of honour at various International Exhibitions, commencing with that of 1851 . They received special certificates of thanks in connection with the brilliant series of South Kensington Exhibitions in the eighties, and in 1900 they decorated the Entrance Hall, Inner Hall, and Draw ing Room for the British Royal Pavilion at the Paris Exhibition, after the sumptuous Elizabethan man-ner-a work which achieved the rare distinction of a double Grand Prix.

So one sees that, notwithstanding the great age of this interesting firm, it possesses all the vigour and energy of youth, and that throughout the whole of its career it has kept well abreast of the varied movements of decorative art. Within the last few years Gillow's have been commissioned to decorate and furnish in Australia, South Africa, India, New York, Baltimore, St. Louis, Germany, and France; while the curators of Continental museums have shown their appreciation of the firm's work by purchasing various specimens for their collections. Gillow's have also executed important work for her late Majesty, for the late Duke of Albany, for H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, and for several other personages of the Royal Family, and for many members of the Peerage and other branches of the aristocracy. The phenomenal spectacle of an unbroken and untarnished business career extending over two centuries is an indication that the firm adheres to the old traditions which have distinguished it since the earliest period of its history, and that notwithstanding the keen competition in trade, its old excellence of design and honesty of workmanship are still maintained in their original integrity.

Private Collector, who occasionally travels on the continent and who, when in England, is a frequent attendant at the principalanction sales, would be glad to communicate with gentlemen interested in oljects of art, bric-a-brac, books, and MSS.in fact, in collecting generally, especially in its less stereotyped and comparatively inexpensive branches.
[No. 296.
A Gentleman in gool position and a thorough practical business man is engaged visiting some thousands of houses in various towns in Sussex. Having exceptional opportunities of obtaining many articles of value in antiquities, and also a fair knowledge of the same, wishes to correspond with a collector with good knowledge, and would, in consideration for more learning and a small fee, introluce such collector wherever articles he may require are found. Address " Antique."

Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds.-There having been published in the year 1900 two books upon the works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, one entitled "A History of the Warks af Sir Joshza keynolds." written by Mr. Algernon Graves, F.S.A., and Mr. Willians Vine Cronin, and another by Sir Walter Armstrong, Director of the National Gallery, Ireland, entillel. "Sir Joshna Reynolds, first President of the Lioyal Academy," and a considerable amount of original information in the catalugue of Sir Walter Armstrong's book having been obtained from (amongst various other authorities) Messrs. Graves and Cronin's book by Sir Walter Armstrong in the course of the preparation of the catalogue to his book, and oljection having been taken thereto, Sir Walter Armstrong has agreed not to print any further copies of the said catalogue, and desires it in le known that such catalogne does not purport to be a complete list of all the works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, such as Messrs. Graves and Cronin's work, which is undoubtedly the most exhaustive work on the pictures of Sir Jushun Reynolds, and contains much exclusive information, including particular; of many additional pictures not referred to in the catalonue of Sir Walter Armstrong's book.

Dated this serenth day of March, 1902.

TO CONNOISSEURS!

SPECIAL INSURANCE of Rare Furniture, Pictures, Old China, Bric=a=Brac, and Curiosities.

MANY Connoisseurs are unaware that in the unfortunate event of a fire the Insurance Companies require a tabulated priced list of every article destroyed, and unless an Inventory and Valuation is in existence, made by a qualified expert, much trouble and sometimes great loss is incurred by the assured.
HAMPTON & SONS will, at specially moderate fees. prepare a valuation of the whole of the contents of a house, and so place the assured in such a position that a claim is practically indisputable.
HAMPTON & SONS have found on making valuations for this purpose that the majority of their clients owning works of art were under-insured to an alarming extent.
BY special arrangements with a well-known Company indisputable policies can now be granted.

Genuine Antique Furniture and Metal Work require cleaning. It is absolutely essential that this should be done with reverent care. No aids to cleanliness and beauty should be used which are likely to scratch or otherwise injure articles of vertu. The "Globe" Metal and Furniture Polishes are now used all over the World, because experience has shown that they are the best in their respective spheres of utility, and do not injure or otherwise destroy the most delicate work to which they are applied.

Abstract

"We cannot all possess real Rembrandis and Watteaus and Corots, but we can buy good reproductions. And for good reproductions there is nobody better than the Autotype Company, or half so good. We spent a pleasant hour the other moming in their Galleries, and we were surprised at the success of their process, which, more than any other, obtains the actual "values " of the original paintings. Many of these are even improved by the process. For the faulty colouring of some of the greatest artists no longer offends in a monochrome print; the looseness or coarseness of treatment often vanishes when the picture is, to all intents and purposes, reduced in size. If any of your friends lave good pictures, you cannot do better than to present them with a few Autotype reproductions from their favourite masters."-The Outlook, December and, 1899.

NO Book Collector should miss seeing our Catalogues, containing, as they do, descriptions of numbers of desirable books for sale, which will be found practically impossible to procure elsewhere. The "Illustrated Catalogue" has been pronounced on all sides to be the most sumptuously produced, most interestingly compiled, and the completest tllustrated list ever issued by a bookselling firm. It contains full-page reproductions in gold and colours of old bindings and illuminated manuscripts, besides many hundreds of reproductions of title-pages and engravings, & e.

"The Connoisseur'"

Consists of 60 pages (exclusive of Advertisements), containing SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES on ART TOPICS of every description by the best known experts.

THE field in which the Collector is interested is a most fascinating one, but hitherto has not been represented by an independent magazine.
"The Connoisseur" supplies this want, and is the only Magazine of its kind.
It has been founded with exceptional care; it will give invaluable information unobtainable elsewhere, and its numbers when bound will form a standard book of reference.

Every subject with which "The Connoisseur " can rightly deal, interesting to the man or woman of taste, will be written upon and illustrated by the leading authorities of the day.

BEING NOTES OF SOME OF THE PRINTED BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, BROADSIDES, ENGRAVINGS, COINS, MEDALS, POTTERY AND CURIOSA OF ALL SORTS—COLLECTED (1858-1900) BY ## JOHN ELIOT HODGKIN, F.S.A.

THESE volumes are devoted to an account more or less complete of the origin, formation and contents of a Collection which owes any claim to consideration to its wide scope and the rarity of many of its components. It comprises some 22,000 units, classified under more than 100 headings. The following, among other subsections, have received description and in many cases illustration, by facsimiles of the rarer objects:-

Books on Early Medicine, Early Science, Occult Science, Curiosa_-State Docuntents, Original Letters to and from English and Foreign Sovereigns, Original Documents relating to Charles I., Charles II., Pepys, the Pretenders, the Chevalier D'Eon, and many other celebritics.-Collections of Mezzotint and other Portraits, Early Sativical Prints, Portraits of Kemarkable Characters, Frost-fair Engravings and Tickets, Tickets of Admission to Balls, Concerts, etc., by Bartolozzi and others, Rare and Unique Playing Cards, Early Shop-Bills and Trade-Cards (the largest private collection), Ex Libris, The Earliest English Newspapers.-17th Century Traders' Tokens (the largest private collection), English Historical Medals.-E Early English Pottery, Objects in Pewter and in Horn.- Marquetry in Coloured Straw (an unique collection), etc., etc., etc. More fully described are the Incunabula (1466-1 500) _-the English Historical Broadsides (in some respects the most important private collec-tion_-the Books on and Prints of Firework Displays from the earliest times and the Lusus Natura (or natural portraits on agates, etc.), embracing the lovely specimens formerly in the Beresford-Hope collection, and forming an entirely unique assemblage of these marvellous objects.

A chapter on the Dawn of Typography is illustrated by new facsimiles of the carliest productions of the press, a sketch of the Haarlem-Mentz controversy, a chapter on Wooden Types, and another on the Evolution of the Type-Mould, the two latter containing the results of recent original experimental research into the methods of the earlicst type-founders.

The work will be published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.
The price is $£ 2$ 12s. 6d. net to subscribers, to be raised to $£ 3 \mathbf{3 s} .0 \mathrm{~d}$. net on the day of publication.

[^3]:    * Mengs, who was a court painter to spain, and has left several canvases in Madrid, helot that perfection in painting could tre attained by combining the best proints of many masters, Raphael, Correggio and Titian, warking upon Greek designs. As he never managed to combine the necessary gifts it is not easy to say how far his theories may he true, but it must be. recorded to his credit that he recognised Goya's talents and encouraged then, though they were in direct contradiction to his theories.

[^6]:    * "As with Daumier and Millet his sense of form was creative as well as imitative, and like these he was alje it produce an almolutely convincing effect, through his knowledge and intation, where a more careful and conscientious artist would fail; and it is this imaginaion for reality, this power to render nature dramatically and impressively, that makes him one of the most signiticant artists of the last two hundred years."-

    1F. Rothenstein.

[^7]:    * It is interesting to note the different point of view of the modern impressionists of France, who owe much of their truth to Goya. They would hold that there is nothing in Nature, except ara/eurs colores, and yet their faithful devotion in the living aspect of things is a direct inheritance from Goya.
