A PROFITABLE RUMMAGE.

One afternoon last winter, having nothing else to do I went up garret and began looking around in the old trunks and in a short time I came across a large envelope which I opened.

It contained but a single stamp which on taking out proved to be three cent Executive Department.

I have rummaged around in the trunks many times since but have never come across another stamp.

EITHER.

He --"Shall we try the tricycle or buggy this morning, Laura?"

She--"Either, George. I'm yours for wheel or whoa." (chicago tribune.)

THE LAST DAY IN CAMP.

BY E. JACKSON.

CHAPTER I.

"I wonder why Tom does not return. He said he was only going over the hill a few minutes to fish, and it is now an hour since he started."

The speaker was a long lank youth about sixteen years old. His name was Jack Newton, and he his two friends, Tom Irving, and Homer Eldridge were camping on the borders of Conckling Lake.

"Shall I go look for him or will you?" said Homer?

"I think you better go while I get dinner," replied Jack.

So Homer took his rifle and started out. He went directly to the summit of the hill and looked in every direction for Tom but he was not to be seen, so he descended; at the same time keeping a sharp lookout for the missing one.

At last he came to an open space in the forest and a ludicrous spectacle met his gaze; there was Tom in a small birch tree, and a large black bear at the foot gazing up at him.

To be continued,

THE USUAL WAY.

A dude was walking down the street,
Staring at everything that he'd meet;
At length to a clothing store he went,
On a braud new suit his mind intent.

A year a<sup>t</sup>ter this the tailor called
At the dudes house, but a servant bawled,
That his master was ill, and must keep still,
And therefore could not pay the bill.

Seven times did that tailor call,
But never could get beyond the hall.
At last he said to himself with a will,
He'd have him arrested for not paying the bill.

EDITORIAL.

We wish every person who receives a copy of this paper would send in their subscription, advertisement or exchange note, for the more the better of these, the better the paper will be.

We have received a copy of the Philatelic Fraud List, published by A. B. Merrill, of Everett Mass. It is a very useful pamphlet that should be in the hands of every stamp collector.

EDITORIAL Con.

Next month this paper will be issued under a new heading that of "The Meteor," as the editor has joined in partnership with Mr. G.W. Halliwell, Jr.
