A Stamp Vacation

Vacation time is here, many collectors are now enjoying the sea breezes or roaming the mountain sides, others are planning to spend at least a few days at their favorite summer resort, therefore the first question to arise when packing is, shall I take my collection? Why not? Only a few years ago a dealer who is in the habit of spending his summers at a well known shore resort, had taken up his regular quarters for the season when he awoke to the fact that many collectors were present and that most of them were collecting, he could not long resist the temptation to send home for a portion of his stock, and, with an eye to business, fitted up a corner of one room where he made such display as the space permitted, then placing a sign in the most conspicuous window, the fun began, for fun it was for all concerned. The collectors came afternoons and evenings, and if the buying was not heavy, the interest was all that could be desired, the stamp topics of the day were discussed, and many fine specimens were on exhibition, while others exchanged their duplicates to advantage, making many long evenings pass quickly.

Stormy days could be made days of pleasure by going over your collection making notes of your wants, and, as many real bargains are offered during the summer months, have your mail forwarded, and each day you can find time to look over the advertisements whereby you can make many additions at a great saving. By all means take your collection, do not place it in the bottom of your trunk where it will remain until you are home again, let it be last in and first out.

The United States of South Africa

[The article below which appeared in the July number of the "Review of Reviews," although not of a stamp nature, may be of interest to those who follow the acts of the government in the South African Colonies.]

By the results of the referendum held early last month in Natal, as to whether or not that colony should join the South African Union, the new nation of English speech becomes an actual fact. The legislatures of the Transvaal, Cape Colony, Orange River Colony and Natal have now confirmed the constitution as adopted at the Bloemfontein convention last year, and these colonies will hereafter form a single nation with a strongly centralized government. This constitution is in the form of a bill which will now be brought before the Imperial Parliament at London for ratification. In general, its provisions are similar to those of the Canadian Constitution, except in the highly important particular, that in addition to reserving to the Federal Government, all powers not expressly delegated in the organic act to the provinces, it expressly leaves no exclusive powers whatsoever to the provincial authorities. Provision is made for the future admission of Rhodesia to the union. English and Dutch will be the official languages on exactly equal legal terms. In the case of the future transfer of native land to the New Commonwealth, the sale of liquor is to be absolutely prohibited in the lands acquired. The first assembly which will gather as soon as the Government at London has ratified the constitution, will consist of 121 members.
